PREFACE.

ATTENTION at last is being drawn to Parish Registers. Many are being copied and published; the contents of these are thus accessible to all, without loss of time and without expense being incurred by making long journeys to consult them, to say nothing of the difficulty found by many in reading the writing of olden times. Here in England, this work has been left to the Harleian Society and to a few amateurs, who, with an innate love of collecting and imparting genealogical lore, have devoted their time to such work. With regard to this all-important source of family history, England, as a country, is far behind France and Belgium, where the old Registers of Baptisms, Marriages, and Burials have, for years past in all communes, been carefully transcribed and arranged in alphabetical order. These new Registers are open, at the offices of the Etat Civil, for the free inspection of the public, and permission is generally accorded to refer to the original Registers. Holland is slowly awaking to the consciousness of the desirability of a like state of things; the Town Councils of Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Haarlem, and other towns have had, are having, or are about to have, their respective Parish Registers copied and arranged. The society formed to collect together all the matter connected with the history of the Walloon churches in Holland, in the most spirited way possible, has had copied and arranged in one vast collection all the Registers of the numerous French or Walloon churches in the various towns of Holland, where the refugees from Belgium and France during the 16th, 17th and 18th centuries and their descendants assembled together for divine worship conducted in the French tongue, according to the tenets of the reformed religion. It is much to be desired that the eighty-nine Registers of the French and Walloon Churches established at London, Canterbury, Norwich, Plymouth, Southampton, and Thorpe-le-Soken, dating from 1567 to the present day, and now in the custody of the Registrar General at Somerset House, London, should be treated in a similar manner by some existing Society, or by one formed for the special purpose.

All, who have made research in the Low Countries for particulars of family history, have been nearly certain to find, that as soon as they have traced back to the 16th century, there occurs a dark period of obscurity, with but little sun to throw its light on the object of their search. The sought for name is found again abundantly in the earlier years of that century and those preceding it. Lucky, very lucky is the enquirer, if he can break through the darkness of the "times of the troubles," when the tyranny and evil rule of King Philip II, carried into full effect by the agency of the cruel Duke of Alva, caused untold thousands of his subjects to fly for refuge to England, Germany, and Switzerland, in order to save their lives and to worship their Creator openly and securely according to the tenets of the Reformed Church.

At first, and for some time after their coming to this country, the refugees married much amongst themselves, but gradually as they became better known and appreciated many made alliances with English families.¹

The dark and difficult period, to the genealogist, of the times of the troubles in the Low Countries has been duly experienced by me in researches I have made in some sixty towns during the past eight years, for matter connected with my family history. I was aided in those researches with the most generous help of very many friends residing in those towns, and I universally met with the greatest kindness from all the various officials, from whom I had to obtain leave to consult the Registers in the archives entrusted to their care. I have felt that I, in my turn, could help to dispel some of the difficulties found in those dark times by editing the Registers of the Dutch (Nederduitsche) Church at Austin Friars, London, which was the most important, in this country, of all the Churches of the Refugees from the Netherlands.

Very many members of noble families were to be found amongst the strangers who sought refuge on our shores; many of their children and descendants were absorbed in this country by marriage, though many of them went to protestant Holland when the times became quieter. England was thus, so to speak, a bridge, by means of which many Belgian families made their way to Holland, where they afterwards established themselves.

Nowhere can a reference be found to any earlier Registers than those now existing in the Archives of the Church. From the following entry made in the minute book of the Consistory 13 May, 1571, it would appear that, prior to that date, no Marriage or Baptismal Registers had been kept. "It is determined that, for the future, all persons who marry in our Church, and the children who are baptized shall, with the names of the fathers and witnesses, be entered in a separate Register."

From this date the Registers are complete. The applications to marry, from 1569 to 1571, having previously been entered in the Minute Books.¹

These Registers are in a good state of preservation, with the exception of a small portion of the marriages from 1612 for a certain number of years, where some of the days of the month have been cut off through carelessness when the volume was re-bound.

The celebration of Marriages having been discontinued in the Church for some years, they were again solemnized after the 20th December 1856, according to the following notice with the above date attached to it, which appeared in the London Gazette of the 2nd January 1857.—"The Dutch Church, Austin Friars, in the Parish of St. Peters-le-Poor, was duly registered for solemnizing Marriages therein, pursuant to the Act of 6th and 7th William IV. Cap. 85."

From the commencement of the Registers the years were reckoned by New Style, beginning with 1st January. Very many Baptismal entries were imperfectly made, the ceremony having often taken place at the homes of the parents and the details having apparently been forgotten by the Ministers officiating. These imperfect entries could not be arranged under family names, but are given as they appear after letter Z.

Some Baptisms took place at Mortlake, in the Parish Church, and were entered in the Austin Friars Registers, many of the Dutch Colony having been engaged in the tapestry and carpet factory that was established there shortly after the year 1619. Some few entries of the tapestry weavers are to be found in the Parish Registers at Putney and Mortlake; the Low Country names soon being changed, such as Hullenberghe into Hulliberry, etc.

The Burial Register commenced only in 1675, though an order was made 26 April 1657, that such a book should be kept. Stow, in his Survey of London, the first edition of which was published in 1598, stated that "Since this Church hath been appropriated to the use of the Dutch nation, few have been buried here except the Ministers belonging to it, and the Elders or others of more eminent quality or wealth." The various inscriptions given in the edition by Strype, 1720, are of a date later than 1675. A few stones, in which fine brasses were formerly inserted with armories quartered in the foreign fashion, are still to be found in the South Aisle. One in particular may be mentioned, with marks where the brasses once were, with foreign quarterings of arms of a man with his three wives and numerous progeny, but no record can be found of the names of the persons buried under it. All the monuments and inscriptions, noticed by Stow, of English families prior to 1550 have been removed.

From the Registers of the Austin Friars Church it appears that there were about 1000 Marriages and 4000 Baptisms between May 1571 and December 1601. In the year 1591-2 there were more Baptisms than in any other year; after 1593 they decreased greatly in number. This points to the fact that many members of the church must have left London for Holland about that time.

In 1602 there were 107 Baptisms.				In 1691 there were 40 Baptisms.

These particulars taken every few years tend to shew the numbers frequenting the Dutch service.

¹ An earlier Minute or Act Book has recently been found from 1561 to 1563. Not having yet examined this small 4to. MS., I cannot say whether any applications to marry are there entered.

It may be necessary to explain to English genealogists and others, that in the 15th and first half of the 16th centuries when two christian names appear, the second one almost invariably would be the baptismal name of the father; and that when two such names appear with "sen" added to the second with the surname omitted, it was thus entered according to the then custom in Holland. As an example may be given the long and careful search that was made both abroad and in this country for Apollonia, daughter of Baldwin Ridley, the wife of Francis Tyssen, as given in the visitation of London, and whom he must have married in Holland. Hopeless seemed the search, when at last she was found under the guise of Leuntje Bauwens, i.e. Leuntje (the diminutive of Apollonia). Ploontje, Pleuntje, Leuntje, daughter of Bauwens, Baldwin; the surname of Ridley being omitted. The proof was found in an original register kept by one of the family, in the writing of the period. In Friesland, so general was this omission of the surname, that it is quite impossible to make genealogical research with the aid of the Parish Registers, protocols of the Notaries alone being of avail. It is a curious fact that in Holland, these Notarial documents are by the special law of the country secret papers, not accessible to the public, who cannot, though the inquirer belongs to the family to which they refer, see deeds which affect him, unless he can give the name of the Notary who drew them and their exact date. This to a seeker after unknown particulars is impossible to give, while in the majority of cases the Notary under whose care the collection is placed, is unable to read the old writing of the period required. This law holds good even for documents of the 16th and 17th centuries, which can have no effect on property at the present day. Research therefore for facts, connected not only with family history but with the history of the nation and of painters and others connected with art, is very difficult in that country, and why this law should not be altered or relaxed, with regard to documents before 1811, it is difficult to say, seeing that the like documents are free to the public at all the State and other archives in Belgium and other countries. Even in the province of Gelderland, where there were no Notaries in past times, and where all family and other documents were passed before the Magistrates of the various towns, the Registers of the courts are always accessible and open for inspection. In England all State and domestic papers up to a certain date, and all the records of the law courts, are open for research and inspection; all Wills and Testaments previous to 1784, can be sought for and copied by literary inquirers without payment of fees, while all such documents to the present day can be perused by the general public on the payment of a fee of one shilling, and copies are given at a fixed low rate. It is earnestly to be hoped that the increasing interest in family and other research will induce an alteration of this law in Holland, which, alas, in times past, notoriously has not hindered but rather concealed the abstraction of many all important family documents from these collections of deeds passed by the Notaries. If altered, as wished for by many in that country, the law would be assimilated to that of other nations.

It will be noticed that the Marriage Register of the Dutch Church at Austin Friars is of a most important character, the birth places of both parties to the marriage being given in every case; by means of which indications, research can be pursued in those towns where the refugees came from. The "Lidmaten Boeken" or Member Books of the Church from 1584 are fortunately preserved, though an earlier one is missing; an index of the first volume, arranged according to the baptismal name, only existing. These give similar indications in many cases, and it is my intention to devote some spare hours to the copying and arrangement of the names of men who were admitted members of the Dutch Church. Besides these, the Afkonding or Memorandum Books, where the banns were entered, also exist from 1615, these are also of great importance because many banns were published at the church at Austin Friars of Marriages which were celebrated at the other Dutch or perchance at English parish churches. These Dutch churches established in England were eight in number, viz., London, Norwich, Colchester, Maidston, Canvey Island, Yarmouth, Sandwich, and the Dutch Chapel Royal, St. James. Unfortunately, with the exception of the Dutch Church, Austin Friars, and of St. James, London, of Colchester and Norwich, all the Registers are missing. Those of Austin Friars are, as has been stated, perfect from 1571, Burials having taken place only since 1675.

The Registers of the Dutch Chapel Royal, St. James, from the date of its establishment in 1689 to 1809, are now in the keeping of the Registrar General at Somerset House, numbered 40 in the list of the Foreign Churches. Those of Colchester, known to be in existence, consist only of the Baptisms from 1645 to 1728, when service in the church seems to have been discontinued; this volume, the existence of which was unknown to Mr. J. S. Burn, who had made every inquiry concerning these Registers, I found amongst some old books and papers in an ancient box in the Austin Friars Church, where it had probably been reposing, unknown of, for more than a hundred years. Those of Norwich are imperfect, commencing only in 1676.

Burn, in his "History of the Foreign Refugees" (London, 1846), p. 202, states that "The Register of of this church was referred to in 1717, for the purpose of a grant of arms to John Mackrell, of Norwich, and contained the baptisms of several of his ancestors from 1593. It is now in possession of one of the elders or deacons of the church, etc." This is unfortunately not the case now, whatever it might have been in 1846, for after careful inquiry made by the late Mr. J. R. Daniel Tyssen, the Rev. Adama van Scheltema, and myself, no other Registers than those alluded to above can be found.

In the pedigree, given by Burke in his Landed Gentry, of De Horne, of Stanway Hall, it is stated that "Oliver de Horne, of Nova Kirk, near Ipres, Flanders, came over to England with his wife in the year 1596 or 1597, and settled at Norwich." "But not well liking a strange country, and hearing of a cessation of the persecution in Flanders," says his great-grandson, "after his wife was delivered of a son, whom he named Abraham, the first in the Register of that congregation there (the Dutch), leaving his small family to God Almighty's protection, he shipt himself for Flanders to seek a settlement there again, but in his return was taken sick of the plague, and dyed on ship board." If this statement of Mr. George de Horne, of Colchester (b. 1662, d. 1729), be correct, the lost Registers of the Dutch Church at Norwich commenced in 1596 or 1597.

In speaking of the eight churches where Divine service was performed in the Low Dutch tongue, the numerous churches in this country of the refugees from Belgium, speaking the French language must not be forgotten. It is probable that many of the refugees frequented both the Dutch and Walloon churches, and no research can be complete without reference to the Registers of both Churches.

The Registers still preserved of the French and Walloon Churches are as follows:—London from 1599, Canterbury from 1581, Norwich from 1595, Southampton from 1567, Thorney Abbey, co. Cambridge, from 1654; these are, with the exception of the last which was in the possession of the Curate of Thorney in 1846, to be found, as before stated, deposited with the Registrar General at Somerset House.

In course of time many curious alterations of the names of the strangers occurred, besides those formerly caused by the Registrars simply spelling them according to their pronunciation, such as "Savage" for "de Wilde," and "Field" for "Van de Velde," "Wood" for "du Bois," and so on.

Many families are descended from those whose names are found in these Registers, such as Hoste, De Horne, Vansittart, Corsellis, Boeve, Tyssen, Turek, Browne, De Bert, Van den Bempde Johnstone, and others. These families, as well as others without number descended from the refugees in the female line, will find entries which they may have sought for in vain elsewhere.

With regard to the Burials, which, as has been stated, were only recorded from 1675, and the fee for which was £ 5 to £ 15, the entries are of importance, as they show in many cases the relationship existing between various members of the church.

As a means of identifying the more important members, lists are given of the ministers, elders, and deacons of the Austin Friars Church, with the dates of their appointment.

An account of the history of the Strangers from the Low Countries, and of their churches in England, will appear to many to be wanted as an introduction to the family particulars of the members of their mother church of the refugees. This is given as an Historical Introduction. Mr. J. Sotherden Burn, in his "History of the Foreign Refugees," published in 1846, gave much gleaned from county histories, Strype's and Stow's Works, and the Record Office. Since then the domestic series of State papers have been arranged and calendars made. These and the MS. history of the Dutch Church by the Rev. Simeon Ruytinck, which was published in 1873 by the Marnix Society of Utrecht, and the exhaustive "Life and Works of Jan Utenhove," by the Dr. and Rev. F. Pyper, Leiden, 1883, together with the archives of the Dutch Church, have enabled me to add to the knowledge imparted by the late Mr. Burn. Mr. Wm. Durrant Cooper, F.S.A., who edited the Camden publication of 1862, gave lists of the foreign protestants and aliens resident in England, 1618-1688. We are also indebted to the Rev. David C. A. Agnew for his "French Protestant Refugees," 1871, which includes many particulars of the Walloons. Ample materials now exist for an extended history of the Dutch strangers, which it is to be hoped will some day be taken up more seriously than has hitherto been the case.

My warm and hearty thanks are due, and are now given, to the worthy minister of the Austin Friars Church, the Rev. A. D. Adama Van Scheltema, who has in every way given ready access to the archives entrusted to his charge, and such facilities as were necessary to enable me to complete the task undertaken. The same acknowledgment and sincere thanks I also give to J. J. Howard, Esq. L.L.D., F.S.A., and Robert Hovenden, Esq., for so generously placing at my disposal the results of their labours in copying the inscriptions and armorial bearings on the monumental stones. It may here be stated that some sixteen to eighteen stones with inscriptions are under the floors of the two vestries and the raised stone portion of the chancel, these therefore could not be copied, though some portions of a few appear after the inscriptions which are more or less perfect. This will account for the numbers of the inscriptions under nineteen being missing.¹ Printers' difficulties in arranging the proof caused the numbers on the stones not to appear in regular order. The information these inscriptions give, in addition to that found in the entries of the Burial Register, is so important, that any publication of the Registers would be incomplete without their addition, and I have most gladly availed myself of the kind offer to add these to the Registers. The time taken to engrave the armorics has caused much delay in bringing out the work, but the valuable addition has been well worth waiting for. It is to be hoped that the result will prove useful to many both at home and in the Netherlands, and also in America, where there are many families descended from the religious refugees from the former country. Should this prove to be the case the labour of decyphering, copying, and arranging the contents of the old Registers and Monumental Inscriptions, will not have been time uselessly thrown away.

HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION.

THE earliest settlers from the Netherlands in this country, appear to have been William of Ypres and his followers, who were called over by King Stephen, to aid him against Maude the Empress, in the year 1138. William built a "great messuage, sometime called Ipres Inne," near the church of St. Thomas the Apostle, London, where he dwelt receiving great favour from the King.¹ It is stated that Flemish weavers came over to this country as early as 1253 and taught the art of making linen. King Edward I, at the request of the foreign merchants, gave them many privileges by the Carta Mercatoria,² which enabled the Strangers to reside and carry on trade in this country. This charter was confirmed 27 Richard III, 9 Henry VI, and 4 Edward IV. The Guildhall of London belonged in 1280 to German merchants,³ who probably established themselves here to enjoy the privileges of this charter.

Several statutes were passed in the reign of Edward III⁴ in favour of merchant Strangers, which gave them permission to bring their merchandize into this country and to sell it by wholesale or retail without let or hindrance, on paying the usual customs, subject, however, to the franchises and free customs granted by previous sovereigns to London and to other cities and boroughs. They had also protection and safe conduct to come and dwell in the realm, and "to return thither with their ships, wares, and all manner of merchandize."

About the year 1336, King Edward III, in order to draw to this country the profitable trade of manufacturing English wool, which had become almost a monopoly of the Netherlands' weavers, sent abroad 'Emissaries' to induce the journeymen or apprentices "to come over to England bringing their mystery with them, which would provide their welcome in all places. Here they should feed on fatt beef and mutton till nothing but fulnesse should stint their stomachs; yea, they should feed on the labours of their own hands, enjoying a proportionable profit of their pains to themselves; their beds should be good, and their bed-fellows better, seeing the richest yeomen in England would not disdain to marry their daughters unto them, and such the English beauties, that the most envious foreigners could not but commend them."

"Persuaded with the promises, many Dutch servants leave their masters and make over for England." "The King having gotten this treasury of foreigners, thought not fit to continue them all in one place but bestowed them thorow all the parts of the land that cloathing thereby might be the better dispersed."⁵ A colony of "old Dutch, who left their country on account of an inundation, came to this country in the reign of Henry I, and settled in Pembroke-shire. "A prime Dutch cloth-maker in Gloucestershire had the surname of Web given him by King Edward there; a family still famous for their manufacture."⁶ The abundance of Fuller's earth found in England seemed "to point out our land for the staple of drapery."

In 1356 these weavers of woollen cloth, brought in by Edward III from Flanders, lived in Candlewick Ward, London; they were allowed to hold their meetings in the churchyard of St. Lawrence Poultney, while the weavers of Brabant met in that of St. Mary Somersct. "There were then, in this city, weavers of divers sorts: to wit, of drapery, of tapery and napery."⁷ Another company of linen weavers from the Netherlands established themselves in London in 1368. "Saw one ever a stranger company than that band of a hundred and twenty Dutchmen, who came over to convert merry London to sadness," "marching bare backed, flogging each other as they went and chanting psalms through the streets of the city."

The Corporation of London obtained a charter in 1376, restraining foreigners from selling by retail, and in 1379, when Whittington was passing out of his apprenticeship, the city petitioned the King against certain rights of importation and sale which had been granted to them. The feeling against the Strangers was so great, that in 1381 the houses of the foreign merchants were burnt.¹ "In the rebellion of Wat Tyler in the same year, they executed many Flemings as well as Englishmen; they brought thirteen Flemings out of the Augustine Friars' Church, in London, and seventeen out of another Church, and thirty two in the Vintry, and so on in other places in the city, as also in Southwark, all which they beheaded." From this it would appear that the Austin Friars Church was used at an early day by the Strangers.²

In 1398, Sir Richard Whittington, Mayor, and in 1399, Drew Barrington, Mayor, decreed that no foreigner or stranger should sell any woollen cloth except in Bakewell Hall, in Basinghall Ward, where a weekly market had been established.³ In 1391, many noble Strangers attended the "royal Justs and Turnaments" at Smithfield, as recorded by Froisart, "namely Valerine, Earl of St. Pol, who had married the King's sister; William, the young Earl of Ostarvant, son to Albert of Baviere, Earl of Holland and Henault"⁴

Philip, Duke of Burgundy, after many misunderstandings with England, granted in 1446 numerous important privileges to the English at Antwerp, which were confirmed at a meeting held specially for the purpose at Ghent. In the beginning of the reign of Edward IV, 1463, and in subsequent years, inquisitions were taken, shewing the names of the foreigners residing within the city of London, chargeable to the alien subsidy.⁵ In the reign of Richard III, the Netherlanders resident in England, complained of the taxes levied on them, contrary to the terms of the intercourse, and in 1486 the foreign merchants appealed to the Emperor Maximilian to complain that they were charged so much a head passing from Calais to Dover and returning "as if they had been Jews or infidels;" that besides this, a second toll was levied specially for the King, and that the Lord Mayor levied "scavage" on them in London. Also that the custom dues on each piece of lace had been raised from fourteen pence to five shillings and nine pence, and that the custom-house officers, the searchers and packers, all levied black mail; that the English pirates so robbed them, that they had to pay a shilling in the pound for insurance. The result was, after complaining for ten years, that on the 24th February, 1495, a commercial treaty was made between Henry VII and Philip, Archduke of Austria, which accorded free trade to all towns and ports of each nation besides other mutual arrangements.

On Tuesday in Easter week, 1517, the citizens of London, incited by a sermon preached by Dr. Bell, a Canon of the Spittal, attacked and illtreated the Strangers, having been instructed to do so by one John Lincolne, a broker. On the 30th April their houses near Leadenhall and Blanchapelon were pillaged. The riot was so serious that 278⁺ citizens and boys were arrested, and on the 7th day of May, John Lincolne, Shirwin, and two brothers named Betts, were condemned to death; Lincolne was hanged, and the others were respited and imprisoned.⁶

Shortly after the condemnation of Luther and his adherents at the Diet of Worms in 1520, severe ordinances (Placaten) were issued against the reformers and their followers, when many of them left the Netherlands and came over to settle in England; some bringing large amounts of money with them.

The disputes between Henry VIII and the church, concerning the divorce of Catherine of Arragon, which ended in the execution of Cardinal Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, and Sir Thomas More, brought easier times to the religious refugees from the Netherlands. The Pope, Paul III, resented this treatment of a high dignitary of the church, and issued a sentence of excommunication against the King of England, which was dated at Rome, 3rd of September, 1535.⁷ Speedy was the action and subtle was the response of King Henry VIII and his advisers. Tyndale was at that date in prison at Vilvoorde, having been arrested in the May of the same year by the Procurator General of Brussels at the instance of Henry VIII, his council, and Tunstall, Bishop of London.⁸

Just about this period a new and entire translation of the Bible into English had been printed abroad. It was completed October 4th, 1535, and was ready for issue in England when opportunity offered. That opportunity was offered by the indignation of the English King at the action of the Pope. The printed sheets of the first complete English Bible were soon imported as a trade article with the aid of the merchant Strangers, who had fled for refuge to this country from the severe laws enforced against all those who had joined, or in any way favoured, the reformed religion. What better defiance to the Papal power could be found than an issue of the Bible in the vulgar tongue. That issue, ready printed, was permitted to be sold openly, being provided in this country with a dedication to Henry VIII, signed by Myles Coverdale, in his own words "as I was requyred." Allegiance to the See of Rome was thrown off and very soon every encouragement was given to spread the truths of the Gospel.

While collecting materials for this short history of the Strangers from the Low Countries and of their churches in England, an important document came to light from the archives of the Dutch church at Austin Friars, which will go far to unravel "a tangle of misconception and conjecture" concerning the history of the first complete English Bible, of which Mr. H. Stevens, in his History of the Bible in the Caxton Celebration Exhibition of 1877, untied the first knots.

Before the newly discovered evidence is given at length, it would be well to consider the position of the controversy, both before and after Mr. Stevens' discovery of the reference made to the history of the Coverdale Bible by the Rev. Symeon Ruytinck in his Life of Emanuel Van Meteren, the author of the History of the Netherland wars, given at the end of the edition of 1614 and partially reprinted by Mr. Stevens in "The Bibles in the Caxton Exhibition," 1878. This rediscovery of details, apparently unknown to English students, was an important one and formed a fresh starting point for bibliographers. The passage in question was brought to the notice of Mr. Stevens at Geneva, and he relates that he nursed it with care for four years before he announced it to the English public at the time of the Caxton Celebration, 1877.

It will be granted that all the facts hitherto known of the history of this Bible of 1535 are comprised in the able and critical works on the subject by Mr. F. Fry, 1867; Dr. Eadie, 1876; and Mr. H. Stevens, 1877 and 1878. It will therefore be unnecessary to refer much, if at all, to the older writers, whose statements and opinions have been well sifted. The special thanks of all interested in the subject are due to these three authors for their able treatment of the matter, old and new, connected with the Coverdale Bible. Their critical writings contain all that can possibly be gleaned on the subject from internal and external evidence hitherto known.

In comparing the facts stated and the deductions made by these authors with the statements deposed to by Emanuel Van Meteren (for of these points alone is it necessary to treat in making remarks concerning the Dutch Church document) it has been considered prudent to keep as closely as possible to the very words used, giving references for the sake of satisfaction. The statement of Dr. Eadie,¹ that from 1528 till 1535 the places of Coverdale's residences were unknown, has been cleared up by Mr. Stevens' reference to Ruytinck's Life of Van Meteren, which also answered Mr. Fry, who writes² "we have not been informed where Coverdale resided whilst he was engaged in the work of translation."

Mr. Stevens however appears to hold that Coverdale only went abroad in 1534, and adduces this as an argument against the notion that he was the translator of the Bible that bears his name, the period elapsing from that date to the 4th of Oct., 1535, not giving sufficient time to get through his great task. Dr. Eadie relates that "Thomas Topley, an Augustine Friar of Stoke Clare, confessed, when examined in 1528, that having heard Sir Miles Coverdale preach, 'his mind was sore withdrawn from the blessed sacrament, inso-much that he took it but for a remembrance of Christ's Body.'"³ All must agree with Dr. Eadie's conclusion that after such evidence it could have been no longer safe for Coverdale to remain in England. There is no reason to doubt Foxe's statement that he went to Hamburg and was with Tyndale there in 1529. We know that Tyndale had been at Antwerp three years before this date, for the third edition of his translation into English of the New Testament was printed there at the end of 1526 by Christopher of Endhoven.⁴ Mr. Stevens therefore may be mistaken when stating that Coverdale only left England to go abroad in 1534. There can be no reason to doubt that he was with the many other English refugees at Antwerp the greater part of the time he was absent from England until the date of the completion of the work of translating and printing the Bible of 1535. Mr. Fry writes⁵ "it yet remains a mystery from what press it was issued;" on this point Dr. Eadie satisfies himself, stating⁶ "from typographical evidence that his translation was completed and printed" in Zurich. It is difficult to imagine how Dr. Eadie gives Mr. Fry's "Bible by Coverdale" as an authority in this point.⁷

At all times and by all writers, except Mr Stevens, the great work of translating the first complete English Bible of 1535 has been attributed to Myles Coverdale, who was second alone to William Tyndale. In his name this Bible of Bibles was issued, and, as the sole translator, he signed the dedication to King Henry VIII, and wrote the prologue to the reader. Strong evidence was necessary to upset all the accumulated evidence of ages, and to depose that self-depreciating, humble, and unambitious man from the position he has always held. To the place of honour that Coverdale occupied, the Antwerp merchant, Jacob Van Meteren, was exalted, a position which the literary world was unwilling to accord to him, considering that the text of Ruytinck did not justify Mr. Stevens' deduction.¹ The place of publication hitherto unknown was by Mr. Stevens' discovery announced to be Antwerp; the translating and printing of the work being correctly stated to have been at the cost of the same Jacob van Meteren.

"Though the study has been continued for seven years, after carefully considering the details of the Ruytinck statement for four years, I find very little to modify or change," is Mr. Stevens' conviction even now in 1884.² Nailing his colours, as he does, to the mast, it will be well to give in his own words the history of his discovery and the deductions he draws. Some of these were correct, though his idea that the Bible of 1535 was printed at Antwerp and "his conclusions that the translation itself was the work of Van Meteren and only revised by Myles Coverdale, can hardly now be maintained."³

It will no doubt be considered satisfactory by all interested in this subject, that the deductions so authoritatively put forward in 1877 should be examined by the light of the new evidence so lately discovered. It is certain that "any information in addition to that already reported cannot be devoid of interest to all conversant with this branch of bibliography, and especially to those who are possessors of the first bible in English."⁴

Mr. Stevens writes as follows:⁵ "As to Coverdale and our first complete English Bible, finished the 4th of October, 1535, THE MOST PRECIOUS VOLUME IN OUR LANGUAGE, what do we know? Absolutely next to nothing. Where it was printed, or by whom, or under what circumstances, no historian or bibliographer has as yet given us any trustworthy information." "No literary mystery for the past three centuries has elicited so much inquiry, or so many investigators, especially of late and latest years; yet up to the opening day of this Caxton Celebration, the 30th of June, 1877, all is but mere conjecture." "The very variety of these conjectures proves their falsity, and shows that they are really and truly mere conjectures, without the slightest base or foundation." He tells us⁶ how the statement of Ruytinck, in the life of Emanuel van Meteren, dropped into his mouth after "lying under our noses in most of our libraries for two centuries and a half unnoticed." He "assigns the honour of producing our first English Bible to Antwerp," "the home of JACOB VAN METEREN, the probable translator of our first Bible, who employed Miles Coverdale "to set forth" and father "this specyall translacyon"."⁷ "Coverdale's duties and responsibilities in revising and setting forth this special translation, at Antwerp, in 1534-35, at the cost and charges of Jacob van Meteren, who was also, we believe, its original translator out of "Douche and Latyn" into English were, we take it, precisely the same as when in 1537-38 he revised and set forth the Great Bible in Paris at the cost and charges of Grafton and Whitchurch." "He was employed and required not only to revise and see the Bible through the press, but to father the translation."

We have in the above definite and positive statements of Mr. Stevens the following, viz:

- 1.—That Jacob van Meteren was the original translator out of "Douche and Latyn."
- 2.—That Coverdale was only the reviser and setter forth.
- 3.—That the Bible of 1535 was so translated, revised, printed, and set forth at the cost and charges of Jacob van Meteren.
- 4.—That it was printed at Antwerp.

The statement of Mr. Stevens that the relation of Ruytinck concerning the history of the English Bible of 1535 had been unnoticed for two centuries and a half can hardly be maintained. Jacobus Kok in 1790 wrote that Emanuel van Meteren was born in Antwerp in 1535, and that his father was a printer. That when the wife of the latter was about to give birth to Emanuel, his father had printed a Bible in the English language and had gone to England to arrange for the sale of his works.

Having shown the state of recorded knowledge on the especial points given in the document lately discovered, it will be well to give verbatim this all-important affidavit of the son of the man who, perhaps more than any other, was connected with the whole business of the Bible of 1535.

This highly important and interesting document concerning Jacob van Meteren is an original copy made in 1610, which, with others of the same time concerning the Churchyard of the Austin Friars Church, was found by the Editor in an old box in that Church with a register of the privileges (vryheyden) of the Dutch congregation. It is to be hoped that the discovery of this affidavit will bring about a new investigation and research into the history of the English Bible of 1535, and of its translator and printer.

The following positive and definite facts connected with this Bible were thus deposed to by Emanuel van Meteren.

1.—That Jacob van Meteren employed Myles Coverdale to translate the “ first Bible ” into English at Antwerp.

2.—That it was so translated at the cost of Jacob van Meteren.

3.—That Jacob van Meteren and Edward Whitchurch printed the Bible of 1535 at Paris and London.

All these facts, with the exception of the place where the printing was done, and the addition of Whitchurch’s name, agree perfectly with the statement of Ruytinck.

Mr. Stevens contends “ that Coverdale was not himself the translator, but that Van Meteren was. Coverdale simply aiding him, at his employer’s cost, as a learned reviser, editor, proof reader, and general manager.”² This does not bear the light of the very proof which Ruytinck had in his own possession or even of the statement made in the life of Emanuel van Meteren.

Up to the time of finding this document, the only precise information, beyond that contained in the title pages of the Bible and the dedication and prologue by Coverdale, rested in the statement of Ruytinck, given to English students by Mr. Stevens. This was written after the death of Emanuel van Meteren in April, 1612. “ Out of love which I had for him, I wrote his life and death, which can be read at the end of the last edition of his book,” published in 1614.³

All the biographers of Jacob and Emanuel van Meteren took the particulars concerning that family and the connection of the former with Coverdale from this life of Emanuel by Ruytinck, and they all refer to it. The Rev. Symeon Ruytinck was the senior Minister of the Dutch Church, while Emanuel van Meteren was one of the oldest members of the congregation and the leading member of the merchant Strangers, as the Netherland Consul; there must, therefore, have been constant communication between them. The whole history of the English Bible of 1535 must have been well known to both; to Van Meteren from his parents, and to Ruytinck as conservator of the archives of the Church. It is probable that the latter, knowing the story well, did not trouble himself to consult the deposition of the former, which was in his keeping, but added carelessly, “ and printing ” when writing the life of his dear friend the historian, and recording the fact that Jacob van Meteren paid the cost of translating the English Bible at Antwerp. Thus probable that this Bible was printed either in Zurich, Frankfort, Cologne, or Paris." "These opinions, however, are only suppositions on a subject where evidence should be adduced."

That prohibited Bibles were printed in Paris at an early date is proved by the catalogue attached to the Placard, published by the Emperor Charles V on the 31st July, 1546, concerning heretical books, which "had been declared to be evil or dangerous" by the Faculty of Divines of the University of Louvain. Among the forbidden books were the Latin Bibles printed at Paris by Robert Stevens in the years 1532 and 1540.¹

The fact, stated by Mr. Stevens,² that "an exposcayo. vpo. the psalms of Miserere made by Hierom Sauonarola" was printed at Paris in English by Francois Regnault without date, but probably before 1538, tends to show that English books on religious subjects were set up in type at Paris at about the date the Bible was printed. This, and the additional fact, also referred to by Mr. Stevens,³ in the letter dated from Paris, 12th Sept., 1538, by Coverdale and Grafton to Cromwell, concerning Francis Regnault, the Paris printer, who "hath bene an occupier into England more than XL yere, he hath allwayes provyded soche bookes for England, as they moost occupied," may be taken as a clue to the name of the printer at Paris of the Bible of 1535. Regnault was also entrusted with putting into type the Great Bible of 1539. It will be of importance therefore that all the books printed by Regnault should be carefully examined, to see whether the paper he used had the same watermarks (crowns and bulls' heads) found in the paper of the Coverdale Bible and also whether any of the type used for this Bible is identical with that of other books printed by him.

There is no doubt but that the character of the initial letters (flowers and dotted ground) is very similar in the Coverdale Bible and the "Chroniques et Annals de Haynnau" by Jaques de Guyse, printed by him at Paris in 1532. The large Gothic type of the title pages of the latter book and of the Bible printed by Nycolson in Southwark in 1537 is also very similar in character. It will be required, however, and fairly so, that very direct evidence of identity of the type of the text of the Bible of 1535 with that of other books printed by Regnault or other printers will be required before the name of the printer of the Coverdale Bible will be considered to be revealed.

The statement made by Emanuel van Meteren that the Bible of 1535 was printed at Paris may be considered to hold good as regards the first edition of 1535, while London was undoubtedly the place where the later editions were printed by Nycolson. The fact that the Bible was translated by Myles Coverdale for and at the cost of Jacob van Meteren will be considered settled, confirmed as it is by Coverdale himself. His statements, in his dedication and prologue, with the light of the newly-discovered document stand out as clear as day. In the dedication in the first edition he writes, "as the Holy Ghost moved other men to do the cost hereof, so was I boldened in God to labour in the same." In the dedication of the edition of 1550, Coverdale mentioned his predecessors "whom I have been more glad to follow, according as I was required." Dr. Eadie says,⁴ "the persons so referred to are unknown. For prudential reasons their names were not divulged, and probably they did not covet the perilous notoriety." It is evident that he who was at the cost of the work, whose name we now know, viz., Jacob van Meteren required Coverdale as translator, to follow the versions of certain predecessors, who, as he himself tells us, were the five interpreters, considered by Dr. Eadie⁵ to be the Vulgate, Luther, Zurich or Swiss German Bible, the Latin version of Pagninus, and Tyndale's Pentateuch and New Testament.

It was openly confessed on the first title page that the Bible of 1535 was "translated out of Douche and Latin into English." Dr. Eadie draws attention⁶ to the advice which Coverdale gave the reader in the prologue if he found an error even of one letter to "take thy pen and mend it, considering that thou art as much bound so to do as I am to correct all the rest." This clearly shows the use Coverdale made of the translations of those preceding him.

Dr. Eadie well has it,⁷ "though Coverdale began and carried out the work without co-operation, he never exalts his version as one taken immediately from the Hebrew and Greek text." "The original title-page revealed the truth 'faythfully and truly translated out of Douche and Latyn.'" This curt declaration expresses the simple fact which Dr. Eadie amply proves in Chapter XIX⁸ from the 66 notes "loosely scattered throughout his (Coverdale) Bible. Also in summing up the various evidence known in 1875 he says,⁹ "Coverdale, beyond all doubt, was the translator of the Old Testament after 2 Chronicles, and his translation was accepted by Rogers or Mathews in his Bible of 1537, which also contains all that Tyndale had completed. To Coverdale himself, therefore, and to no copartnership of any kind, is the Bible of 1535 to be ascribed. He claims to be the one doer, and no one who knows his transparency of character can doubt his simple word."

Mr. Fry says, "We have no information that Coverdale was assisted by any scholars of the day," and "Coverdale intended that he should be regarded as the sole translator."

Internal and external testimony prove the claim of Coverdale to be the translator into English of all that Tyndale left unfinished of the work he had commenced, and the reviser of what Tyndale had completed. It is therefore much to be regretted that the mistaken sense of Ruytinck's statement should for a time have been put forward by one of our ablest Bibliographers.

We are told by Ruytinck not only that Jacob van Meteren knew the "noble art"¹ of printing, but that he was learned in many languages. It may well be that he in some way assisted Coverdale when making use of the "Douche" versions, which certainly would be the "Hoochduytsche"² not "Nederduytsche" or the "Vlaamsche taal," as it was commonly called. The term Dutch being used only in England when speaking of the Netherlands. In the Netherlands "Deutsche" is used for German. There can be but little doubt that the original title page, etc., was suppressed because it was considered in England that the translation should have been made from the original Hebrew and Greek. Coverdale, in the foreign sense especially refers to these German translations. "To help me herein I have had sondrye translations, not only in Latyn, but also of the Douche interpreters, whom, because of their singuler gyftes and special diligence in the Bible, I have been the more glad to follow for the most part."

Van Meteren, no doubt, looked upon the translation and printing of the English Bible as a trade transaction. It was necessary for the successful sale of the various editions in England that it should be issued in an English name; the difficulty must have been to find any one willing at that precise time, when all knew the fate of Tyndale, to father the work. Coverdale took the responsibility "to set forth this speycall translacyon," which has been called and now will with perfect certainty continue to be called by his name. He took up the work of those who "wold also with al theyr hartes have perfourmed that they beganne eyf they had not had impediment." Rogers' heart evidently failed him. He too was doubtless "desyred" to place his name to his edition of 1537, revised from the translations of Tyndale and Coverdale, but it appeared under his feigned name of Thomas Matthew. About this very time Rogers married Adriana Pratt, alias Van Weyden, stated to have been a connection of Jacob van Meteren; what more probable than, as Mr. Stevens considers, "that the enterprising foreign citizen of Antwerp,"³ namely, Van Meteren, "got up and printed this Bible also, and sold the whole edition to Grafton and Whitechurch."⁴

It is evident that it was impossible for Jacob van Meteren to have brought out Coverdale's Bible in his own name, for, had it become known in the Netherlands that it had been translated and printed at his cost, he would certainly have shared the fate of Tyndale and probably would have been put on his trial at the same time. That he must have been in danger after the publication is shown by the fact that he found it necessary to come to England for refuge with his children in 1550, returning for his wife, who with him was drowned by the sinking of the vessel in which they embarked two years later, it having been struck by the cannon-shot of a French ship of war, by which it was attacked. Extraordinary precautions must have been taken by him to conceal the fact that he was the responsible person in the risky business, no less than seventeen years having elapsed before he finally left Antwerp. It cannot be wondered at, therefore, that there has been to this time, when the facts are revealed by finding the affidavit of his son, so much mystery around the matter.

Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, and Cromwell, in order to promote the Reformation, which with the aid of the English Bible had spread so rapidly, sent to the Netherlands and Germany for learned protestant divines. Martinus Bucerus, Petrus Martyr, Paulus Fagius, Emanuel Tremellius, Joannes A. Lasco, free Baron of Lasco in Poland, with many others came over at the call.⁵ The latter wrote to Cecil from Embden, in April, 1549, complaining of the troubles of the church there,⁶ so that he must have come to England shortly after that date. Bucer was appointed Professor of Divinity and Fagius Professor of Hebrew at Cambridge, the former being paid three times the usual stipend. The change of climate and diet soon caused both to fall ill. Fagius died not long after his coming to Cambridge, at the age of "scarcely forty-five," and was buried in the Church of St. Michael. Bucer died about 1551, and was buried in St. Mary's Church. Emanuel Tremellius succeeded Fagius in his Professor's seat, but he soon returned to Heidelberg.¹ Peter Martyr was made Professor of Divinity at Oxford, but shortly after the death of King Edward VI solicited leave to return to his country, exhibiting his letters of protection.² It was recorded by Simeon Ruytinck that the first recognized congregation of the religious refugees in England was established by some of the above divines in 1547.

It would appear by the testimony of Strype that in 1547 a congregation of foreign refugees met together at Canterbury.³ Jan Utenhove went to that town shortly after he came to England; he probably took a great part in founding the Walloon Church there,⁴ which had, as its first minister, Francois du Riviere, who two years later occupied a similar position in the French and Walloon Church in London, which was established in 1549. The refugees from France had greatly increased in numbers in consequence of the persecution of the Protestants by Henry II, and there were in 1548 over five thousand Netherlanders in London,⁵ a large proportion being Walloons.

The refugees of this period soon found their way to Norwich; the benefits derived by that city from their residence there "for ten years past" being specially recorded in 1561.⁶ This town and its neighbourhood had been, since the time of Henry I, much frequented by traders and settlers from the Low Countries. In 1336 there was a large increase in the Flemish stuffs or worsted manufacture at Norwich, which caused the city to grow greatly in size, the numbers of the Strangers being much augmented by the intercourse between the two nations, occasioned by the marriage of Edward III with Philippa, daughter of William I, Count of Holland and Hainault.⁷ A great trade in raw wool soon grew up between the two countries, and "the king and state began now to grow very sensible of the great gain the Netherlands got by our English wool, in memory whereof the Duke of Burgundy not long after instituted the Order of the Golden Fleece, wherein, indeed, the Fleece was ours, the Golden theirs, so vast their emolument by the trade of clothing. Our king therefore resolved, if possible, to reduce the trade to his own country."

"Happy the yeoman's house into which one of these Dutchmen did enter, bringing industry and wealth along with them. Such who came in strangers within the doors soon after went out bridegrooms, and returned sons-in-law, having married the daughters of their landlords, who first entertained them, yea, those yeomen in whose houses they harboured soon preceeded gentlemen, gaining great estates to themselves, arms and worship to their estates."⁸

Returns were made for the Alien Subsidy of the City of Norwich in the reign of Henry VI and Edward IV.⁹ In the time of Henry VIII the prosperity caused by the foreign settlers declined, but the new comers to Norwich in 1551 somewhat improved the trade of the place.

The Flemish-speaking refugees, finding the King Edward VI very favorably disposed towards them, appealed to the Duchess of Suffolk, "an enquiring and godly woman," to aid them in procuring a meeting house for religious purposes. By her intervention, through Dr. Coke and Mr. Geeke, the king's schoolmaster, the matter was brought before the king. The Privy Council agreed to give part of the Church of the dissolved Monastery of the Augustine Friars, in London, to Martinus Micronius and Gualterus Delænus, ministers of God's word, for the use of themselves and their brethren. The arrangements were made by the Clerk of the Council, Mr. Armigall Wayd, and the Clerk of the Signet, Mr. Hannings, on a guarantee being given by the Strangers.¹⁰

The grant, with other privileges, was confirmed by letters patent of the king, dated at Leigh, 24th July, 1550, to Joannes A Lasco and Joannes Utenhove.¹¹ It was ordered that the Church should have a superintendent and four ministers, and that it should be a body corporate, according to the following extract from the patent. "Quod idem superintendens et ministri in re et nomine sint et erunt unum corpus corporatum et politicum de se per nomen Superintendentis et Ministrorum Ecclesie Germanorum et aliorum peregrinorum in fundatione Regis Edwardi Sexti in civitate Londineuse."

The first superintendent, Joannes A Lasco, described as a Polish lord and a Professor of Divinity, had been made a Denison by letters patent of the king, dated June 27th, 1550. He acted likewise as a minister of the Church, with Micronius and Delænus as his colleagues for the Netherland, and with Franciscus Rivius and Ricardus van Villers for the French and Walloon refugees, all the foreign churches in London being under his charge.

The king and Privy Council agreed to the articles of faith and the regulations for the services, drawn up by A Lasco in Latin, which were also adopted by the reformed churches in the Netherlands. King Edward "ordered also that hereafter it should be called by the new name of the Church of the Lord Jesus."¹

On the 21st of September, 1550, divine service was first celebrated in the Austin Friars Church by the Strangers, who soon found that the building was too small for their congregation. On the 5th of October four elders were appointed, one of these being Jan Utenhove who, as at Canterbury, was most zealous in the establishment of the Church at Austin Friars. The members of the church, who had settled chiefly in St. Katherine's parish and in Southwark, being troubled by demands that they should attend the services in their parish churches, A Lasco wrote to Cecil, the secretary of the Privy Council, asking that those of his church might have a warrant to the effect that they should not be disturbed in their religious services. About this time A Lasco translated the Psalms into Dutch verse and set them to music.

The church of the Strangers in London was progressing most favorably when King Edward VI died on the 6th July, 1553. Shortly before this date "the corporation of German merchants, who lived in the Steel-yard (so called from the steel imported by them) was dissolved, because it had become detrimental to England by engrossing the whole woollen trade." This corporation of foreign merchants had great privileges granted to it by Henry III in consequence of the assistance he had received from them in his wars. Antwerp and Hamburgh had then the chief trade, and the foreign merchants there soon "had the markets of England in their hands, and set such prices, both on what they imported or exported, as they pleased, and broke all other merchants." On the complaint of the native merchant adventurers, it was adjudged that they had forfeited their charter.²

In the reign of Edward VI an act provided for the regulation of the cottons called Manchester, Lancashire and Cheshire cottons. These were not cotton, but "were really woollen fabrics sold originally under that curious name." The refugees from Ghent and Antwerp brought the true cotton manufacture to Bolton and Manchester. The merchants bought linen yarn in Ireland, which was woven "at Lyrpole," the finished article being sent for sale in the place where the flax was grown.³

On the accession of Queen Mary, the Strangers found another state of affairs. Soon after the contract of marriage made with Phillip II, a proclamation was issued ordering all the Netherland and other Protestant refugees to leave the kingdom within twenty-four days. The congregation was soon dissolved as it did not wish to experience the treatment of which so many of the members had already had a taste in their own country. All who could do so immediately made arrangements to leave England. Joannes A Lasco, Martinus Micronius, and Joannes Utenhovius, with about 175 other persons, embarked in one of two Danish ships which were lying in the Thames; and 32 others, under the care of Walter and Petrus Delænus, went on board the other Danish vessel. They sailed on the 17th September, 1553, from Gravesend together, the former vessel soon reached Denmark, and the latter arrived at Hamburg after many perils from storms, etc. Eventually all were reunited at Emden, where they soon re-established their church, meeting with much kindness from Anna, Countess of Oldenburg; the burgesses of the town being likewise well disposed towards them.⁴

The congregation of Walloon and French weavers established at Glastonbury also broke up on the accession of Queen Mary, and removed itself to Frankfort. It had been established in 1550 with the aid of Jan Utenhove, the Duke of Somerset and Sir William Cecil, who greatly favoured it. The Superintendent was Valerandus Pollanus who arranged with Somerset that five acres of pasture land, or sufficient for feeding two cows, should be allotted to each family. The Duke engaged to supply the Strangers with money to buy wool, and promised that they should be allowed to employ English men and women in spinning and other work.⁵ The settlement, however, was not very prosperous; "the promises and articles" entered into by the Duke not having been kept, the community petitioned the Crown, 11th December, 1551, that they might be carried into effect.¹ An order was made by the Privy Council that this should be done, and on the 22nd March following "void places and rooms about the monastery of Glastonbury" were ordered to be handed over for the use of the Strangers. In December, 5 Edward VI, free denization was granted to Vallerandus Pollanus and 69 other persons.²

The archives of the church in London had been taken abroad with the refugees to Emden by Martin Micronius, but they appear to have been lost or left there.³ The original letters patent of Edward VI alone have been preserved, and are still kept with great care in the archives at Austin Friars. New Minute or Act Books were commenced on the return of the religious refugees to London after the accession of Queen Elizabeth, who "greatly favored the Reformation to the rejoicing of all true Christians."⁴ Hamstedius, Utenhovius and Petrus Delænus, having been appointed ministers, at the instigation of Johannes A Lasco, on the 10th December, 1559, with the elders and deacons, petitioned the Privy Council for the confirmation of the patent of Edward VI.⁵ The answer given was, that it could not be done, but that the Strangers must have a superintendent under the Bishop of the Diocese, and that the church could not be permitted to be a "Corpus Corporatum politicum." All that could be obtained was a grant from the Queen that use should be made of the Austin Friars Church under the supervision of the Justices, and that on those terms the Strangers should again have possession of their former place of worship. In February, 1560, the Queen directed the Marquis of Winchester to deliver over the church of the late Augustine Friars to the Bishop of London for the celebration of divine service by the Strangers in that city.⁶

Finally the congregation had to submit to the supervision of the Bishop of London, who was to be, ex officio, their superintendent, and to whom in the future the ministers and elders had to refer in all matters and difficulties that might arise. Early in 1560 a meeting was called in order to arrange for the welfare of the church, two subsequent meetings being held for the purpose of making new rules and regulations. By consent it was settled "that the ministers, elders, and deacons shall not be appointed by all the members of the church, but by the Church Council of the ministers, elders, and deacons." It was also agreed that students should be admitted to learn God's word, and that a house should be provided and set apart for the poor of the congregation, and that necessary collections should be made.⁷ Jealousy in trade matters was soon shown against the industrious Strangers, they and their church being troubled by the city companies putting in force an old statute which prohibited aliens from holding houses or carrying on trade. The ministers, elders, and deacons therefore petitioned the Queen on the 29th June, 1560, that the "poor religious refugees might not be molested."⁸ This was immediately granted.

In 1561 there was a serious quarrel in the church with Hamstedius, he being accused of a tendency to anabaptism and certain other errors. He was brought before the Bishop and discharged from the ministry. Easily accommodating himself to circumstances, he went to Oldersheym, near Emden, with his family, and engaged himself in the culture of the land.

In 1560, the two hundred alien families which had settled at Sandwich, with the approval of the Queen and the mayor of that town, found it necessary to establish a church. Utenhove went to them on the 1st of October of that year to assist them in this matter, when he arranged for Jacobus Buccrus, who had studied God's word at London, to be their first minister.⁹ By letters patent of 6th July, 1561, a grant was made to the mayor and others of Sandwich to permit the said two hundred alien householders to pursue the trade of making says, bays, and other cloth. The number of persons was 406 in all, and the aisle of St. Clements Church was granted to them for their religious services¹⁰ upon payment of forty shillings a year, and afterwards, 25th of March, 1617, upon bearing the expense of a third part of all the repairs of the church.¹¹ In 1562, Bishop Grindal required the French and Dutch ministers in his Diocese to give him a "Catalogue" of their congregations.¹² This was duly sent in, the names of all strangers in Sandwich on the 20th of January of the following year being included in the return.¹³ and many members of the Dutch church; at that time nearly all the Strangers made their testaments. Godefridus Wingius, who had been schoolmaster to the children of Joannes A Lasco and who had been engaged in 1562 at Emden in superintending the printing of the Bible there,¹ was called from the ministry at Sandwich and appointed to fill the same office at Austin Friars. In his time, 1564, it was ordered by the consistory that no child should be presented for baptism unless there were godfathers and godmothers.

Three years later there arose a great question and quarrel in the church concerning godfathers and godmothers. This was referred to Grindal, Bishop of London, who, with assisting commissioners, gave a decision in writing, dated 19th December, 1567, confirming the discipline hitherto used by the Dutch church, which was in conformity with the other reformed churches, and also with the rules of the elders and deacons who had been appointed to the Austin Friars church.

In 1564 the inhabitants of Norwich were in much distress on account of the decay of the worsted manufacture. The mayor, sheriffs, and others consulted the Duke of Norfolk, and it was decided to invite to their city "divers strangers of the Low Countries, which were now come to London and Sandwich for refuge" and "which strangers had obtained licenses from the Queen to exercise the making of Flanders commodities in Her Majesty's dominions."² On application being made, the Queen granted letters patent on the 5th November, 1564, for 30 master-workmen, each household to consist of 7 persons, and others not to exceed 300 persons in all, being Dutch and Walloons, to settle in Norwich. This, though approved of by the mayor and aldermen, was objected to by the commonalty. The former, however, placed the mayor's seal to the admission of the strangers, and assigned to them, after spending £ 43 in fitting it up, the church of St. Mary at Tombland for their hall, with seals and all other utensils for searching and sealing their manufactures, at a rent of £ 13 per annum.³ Rules and ordinances were made for their government, which were allowed and ordered by the Council on the 25th April, 1571.⁴ Of the thirty masters admitted twenty-four were for the Dutch and six for the Walloons.⁵

It appears that the poorer Flemings who came over from Hammes and Guisnes had a burial place appropriated to them at Saint Katharine's, in Portsoken Ward, London; this was afterwards used for the refugees who came over in Queen Elizabeth's time. From Hammes and Guisnes, the name of this churchyard became corrupted into Hangman's Gains.⁶

In 1565 Francis Bertie, born at Antwerp, was granted by the queen the exclusive privilege of manufacturing white salt for the period of twenty years. In 1567 Anthony Beckx, alias Dolin, and John Quarre, natives of the Low Countries, petitioned for permission to establish a manufactory for table glass, such as was used in France; this appears to have been granted.⁷

Though the refugees from the Low Countries were very numerous before 1567, yet in that year they increased very greatly in consequence of the arrival in the Netherlands of the Duke of Alva with an army of Spanish soldiers. The Duchess of Palma wrote to Philip II "that in a few days above 100,000 men had left the country with their money and goods, and that more were following them every day." "Those who still saw a possibility of effecting their escape from the fated land, swarmed across the frontier. All merchants deserted the great marts."⁸

In the next year, great numbers fled from France, the "edicts for the free exercise being broken, their ministers banished and much blood spilt."⁹

In June, 1567, the merchant strangers of the Low Countries, established in England, were discharged by a royal warrant from the two payments of subsidies granted by Parliament.¹⁰

On the 21st July, 1567, Lord Cecil was informed that commissioners had granted a license, by letters patent, to establish "certain foreigners" in Maidstone, in nearly the same terms as the one granted for Sandwich, namely, that they should pay half strangers' subsidies; and on the 22nd July, Bishop Grindal backed up the petition of the strangers to the Queen to be allowed to settle at various towns, they representing that they were reduced to great extremities.

A renewed flight of refugees from the Low Countries was the result of the severity of the Duke of Alva in punishing the inhabitants of the various towns who had been engaged in the destruction of Images and in plundering churches.

In 1568, "the blood council, the inquisition, the new Bishops, the beheading of many noblemen, caused very many to fly from their country, and brought into England many trades, such as 'Bayen, Sayen, Trypen, Grosgreynen, Moccaden,' and many who worked on the land. These settled chiefly at Norwich, Sandwich, Colchester, Southampton, and Maidston, where, by the favor of the Queen, they were able to serve God in their mother tongue."¹ Others found their way to various towns. License was granted by the Privy Council for the Strangers to settle at Great Yarmouth in 1568, and at Lynn, for thirty families of ten numbers each, on the 8th June, 1570. Many went to Canterbury, where permission to settle had previously been given by the Queen's letter in 1561, confirmed in 1567. The mayor of Southampton requested permission from the Privy Council on the 29th May, 1567, for 100 strangers or more to reside in that town to teach their arts of manufacture;² this was backed up by the Bishop of the Diocese on the 30th June of the same year. These petitions were the result of an application made by the refugees.³ Leave was granted by the Council,⁴ and according to the date of the registers of the Walloon Church of Southampton the Strangers must have been established there in the above year. The Chapel of St. Julian or God's House was given to them for religious purposes. At the end of the register of that church is an interesting list of the feasts and fasts observed by the various congregations of the refugees to this country.

At Dover there was a Dutch Church before 1576, and, from letters dated 1575, it would appear that a settlement was made also at Thetford. The numbers of the refugees at these places soon increased, and restrictions were made by order of the Town Councils. At Lynn, on the 6th February, 1574, it was set forth that no more were to dwell in the town but such as were admitted into the congregation, which was not to exceed the number stated in the Queen's grant; that vacancies by death or departure only were to be filled up; that none of their poor should be chargeable to the town; that they should have only ten fishing boats, and that they should not buy victuals except for those of their own congregation.⁵ These licenses enabled the Strangers to establish churches under their own ministers, and to hold the services in the Dutch and Walloon or French languages, the administration of which churches were kept quite distinct.

At a general congregation of Brethren, gathered together at Geneva 25th June, 1568, thirty-two articles or propositions were agreed to, which had been framed for the use of the Dutch congregation in London. These, through the ministers and elders, were published September 18th in the same year, with the permission of their superintendent, Grindal, Bishop of London, in Dutch, English, and Latin, being printed by Jugg, the Queen's printer.⁶

From the year 1567, and at intervals afterwards, orders were sent by the Privy Council to the local authorities to transmit complete and careful lists of the Strangers, giving their names and those of their wives, children, and servants, with their residences, occupations, the length of time they had been in the country, and the places abroad where they had been born. In one of the early lists the number of Strangers, registered in London alone, amounted to over 5300.

In 1568 there appears to have been some uneasiness on account of the increasing number of Strangers coming to England, for, on the 15th September, Sir Francis Walsingham gave orders for all Strangers in London to be certified weekly.⁷

Returns were made of the Walloon and Flemish refugees residing in Rye on the 28th May, 1569.⁸ In another return, made on 4th November, 1572, for the same town, the number was 641,⁹ their chapel being that of the Augustin Friars, in Conduit Street. By 1569 the Strangers at Norwich had much increased, the Privy Council having authorised 1132 to reside there. The choir of the Friars Preachers' or Black Friars Church was assigned to the Dutch congregation, and the Court, on 24th February, 1569, confirmed certain articles, settled with the minister concerning the keeping of due order in the church.¹⁰ In 1571 the Archbishop and other High Commissioners decreed that the Bishop of Norwich, and not the Mayor or citizens, had jurisdiction over the Strangers in matters ecclesiastical.¹¹ The Dutch congregation continued to use the Black Friars Church by leave only, until 1619, when it was leased to them at 6s.8d. per annum. In 1650 the Mayor and Council resumed possession of it for their own services, and the Dutch were

James, but the Council ordered that the indictments and presentments should be no further proceeded with; and that the said Strangers be not "from henceforth in any such sort molested."¹ On the 17th October, 1612, James I granted them letters patent to make Bays, Says, and other foreign draperies.² The congregation was dissolved soon after 1728, the trade in Says and Bays having at that date decayed.

According to the order of Lord Cecil, returns were made in 1571 of the Strangers "residing and abiding" in the town of London and its suburbs, Harwich, Colchester,³ Great Yarmouth, Lynn, Dover, Sandwich, Ipswich, Norwich, Southampton, Boston, and the Cinque Ports.⁴ At this period many privileges were granted to the merchant Strangers; an important one being exemption from contributions to the subsidy within the city of London.⁵ It was soon found that the Strangers were most diligent in all business matters, and that they brought in new manufactures and were increasing the trade of the country.

In August, 1571, Sandys, Bishop of London, asserted his right to act as the superintendent of the Church at Austin Friars, as his predecessor Grindal had done. The Bishop of Norwich, however, disclaimed all right over the Strangers' Church, established in this year at that town.

On 4th October, 1571, the first national Synod was held at Emden, where Petrus Dathenius represented the Dutch Churches in England. In 1572 many towns in Holland, having freed themselves from the Spanish yoke by aid of the Water Geusen, the Prince of Orange wrote most gracious letters to the Church in London, requesting that faithful ministers might be sent to the mother-country. Bartholdus and Wingius immediately responded to the call, their places being filled by Joannes Cubus and Jacobus Regius.⁶ In the following year the Prince sent a special messenger entreating the Church in London to send him assistance in the way of provisions and military stores.⁷

The massacre of St. Bartholomew at Paris, on the 23rd August, 1572, caused many French protestants to fly to England for refuge, and though these refugees increased so greatly in number they still received the monthly sacrament in the Dutch Church, which was called "Jesus Tempel." At this time Church Reform was much desired by the English clergy, and great interest was taken in the rules and regulations of the Dutch Church. The attention of the Privy Council was drawn to this, and instructions were given in writing that there should be no communication or encouragement given to the English Church by that of the Strangers, and that the funeral sermons preached in Dutch at the parish Churches, on the occasion of the burial of members of the Dutch Church, should be discontinued. Orders were also given that no parish clergyman should perform the ceremony of marriage for Strangers without the consent of the Consistory of the Strangers' Church.

At the latter end of 1572, Lord Burleigh induced many families of the refugees from the Low Countries to settle at Stamford, which town chiefly belonged to him. These settlers were mostly woollen weavers, but others worked in steel, copper, and other trades. Isbrandus Balkius, who had been deposed from the ministry of the Dutch Church at Norwich by a decree of the Archbishop, with Casper Vosbergius, in the name of the other settlers, petitioned Lord Burleigh to grant the Strangers' Church at Stamford certain privileges set forth in ten articles.⁸ This congregation elected Balkius as the first minister, who furnished himself with testimonials from the Bishop of Norwich, dated 8th March, 1571, and continued "a great while" in Stamford. This Church, however, was dissolved and dispersed sometime before 1711.⁹

In 1573, the London tradesmen, who found themselves powerless to restrain the refugees from selling by retail, issued fly-sheets with the following: "Doth not the world see that you beastly brutes the Belgians, or rather drunken drones and faint-hearted Flemings, and you fraudulent father-Frenchmen, by your cowardly flight from your own natural countries, have abandoned the same into the hands of your proud cowardly enemies; and have, by a feigned hypocrisy and counterfeit show of religion, placed yourselves here in a most fertile soil, under a most gracious and merciful prince who hath been contented, to the great prejudice of her natural subjects, to suffer you to live here in better case and more freedom than her own people.

"Be it known to all Flemings and Frenchmen that it is best for them to depart out of the realm of England between this and the 9th of July next; if not, then to take that which follows. There shall be many a sore stripe; apprentices will rise to the number of 2336, and all apprentices and journeymen will down with the Flemings and Strangers."¹⁰

In 1575, the Burgesses appealed to the Bishop of London that the Church in Austin Friars should not be allowed to increase the number of its members, "and the Dutch Church claimed that none of its members should be married in the parish Churches. In this year the condition of the people of the Low Countries was so sad that great numbers of them had fled over hither and desired to join with the Dutch Church in London, and to become members thereof. Yet so tender was the Queen of breaking with that proud and powerful prince, the King of Spain, that she would not admit of this, nor give countenance to such as fled out of these countries under his subjection."¹

By order of the Queen, the Lord Mayor was commanded to disperse these new-comers from London. The Bishop of London was begged to represent their case to the Queen and Council, and the Council advised that the new-comers should depart from London and should go to other parts of the country where Churches of their religion had been established. In this year the national Synod of the Netherland Reformed Churches in England met in London. The Austin Friars, Norwich, Colchester, Maidstone, and Thetford Churches being represented by their ministers, and those of Sandwich and Yarmouth by their elders. For some time these Synods met yearly, then at intervals; but after 1609 it was arranged that they should meet every third year.

The Anabaptists, against whom there was so much prejudice in Holland by those of the Reformed Church, were found met together in London on Easter Day, 1575, and the whole congregation, consisting of twenty-seven persons, was arrested by order of the Privy Council, and examined before the Bishop of London. They were afterwards brought to trial before the Council, when the ministers of the Dutch Church appeared to give evidence against them, though they did all possible to avert the doom of Jan. Wielmaker and Hendrik Terwoert, who were condemned to be burnt, the execution taking place on the 22nd July, 1575. The other prisoners were strictly admonished to amend their ways.²

In 1580, "the family of love" became numerous and troublesome. Henry Nicholas, of Amsterdam, who had "first vented" this sect in Holland in 1550, came to England in the latter part of the reign of Edward VI, and "joined himself to the Dutch congregation in London, where he seduced a number of artificers and silly women." Martin Micronius and Nicholaus Charineus opposed Nicholas and his followers, many of whom were English. The attention of the Privy Council was drawn to them, but with what effect does not appear.³

The "Pacification of Ghent" having been made in 1576, there was a great demand on the Church at London for ministers of God's Word to be sent to the fatherland. Few could be spared: though greatly pressed, Jacobus Regius refused to go to Ghent on the ground that "the harvest at London was so great and the labourers so few." Shortly afterwards he was persuaded to go there, but was recalled in 1584.

Isbrandus Balkius, the minister at Sandwich, and Jan van Roo, an Elder of London, represented the English Churches at the national Synod, held at Dordrecht in 1578.

On the 27th December, 1576, Sergeant Nicholas Burham wrote to Burghley concerning the condition of the Strangers at Sandwich and Maidstone, to whom the Queen had granted letters patent for license to settle.⁴ Troubles arose between the refugees and the Mayor and Corporation of the former place; in 1582 there was an enquiry made by the Privy Council to discover by what authority such severe decrees were made by the Corporation against the Strangers.⁵ It would appear that there were large mercantile transactions between the Mayor, and others of the town, and the foreign merchants, for, in 1584, the Privy Council wrote, without avail, to the States of Zeeland and Holland to procure satisfaction for the losses sustained by the merchants of Sandwich.⁶

In 1577, the Dutch Strangers inhabiting Halstead, in Essex, petitioned the Privy Council that forty families might be permitted to inhabit that place, so that they might quietly follow their trades.⁷

In 1584, London again suffered severely from the Plague, when many of the Church, including one of the ministers, Jan van Roo, who had taken orders in 1580, died from the effects of it.

In 1582, a certain German or Dutchman born, named Peter Moris, having made an "artificiall forcier," conveyed Thames water in pipes of lead over the steeple of St. Magnus Church at the north end of London Bridge, and thus brought it to a water standard at the parting of the four ways at the east end of Cornhill.⁸

The Prince of Palma subduing the rebellion in Flanders in 1584, after the arrangement with Ghent in this year, caused a renewed flight of Protestant Refugees to England, nearly all joining the foreign Churches in the various towns where they established themselves. Sir Francis Walsingham was a warm friend to them, and the position of the Strangers was again much improved when the Earl of Leicester took charge of the Netherlands, though they had to contribute their share towards the subsidies for maintaining the army and fleet. They urged that the cost of their poor and of the Church was very heavy, and begged to be excused from paying, but the answer was that it was for the good of the Fatherland they were asked to contribute. The characteristic entry of £ 550 "for the squeezed Fatherland, by the Burdens of the High Council," appears in the lists of collections for charitable purposes.

When the Spanish Armada was fitting out for the purpose of conquering England, the Privy Council communicated with the Dutch and Walloon Churches of London, and, in 1588, the Strangers were required to find their proportion of soldiers. Ruytinck records that "the Armada was fought from the 25th to the 29th of October, and, by God's help, was destroyed by the English and Dutch vessels." The medals, that were struck in commemoration of the great victory over the Spanish Fleet, were distributed to certain members of the Church through their minister, Jacobus Regius.¹

"Many Strangers resided within the liberties of the Sanctuary, St. Martins le Grand, London. In 1585, a survey was taken of all the foreigners, French, Germans, Dutch, and Scots, also of their occupations. Many of these were cordwainers or shoemakers, tailors, button-makers, goldsmiths, purse-makers, linen-drappers, stationers, merchants, silkweavers, and two silk-twisters, who were supposed to be the first silk-throwers in London, and brought the trade into England. One of these latter was named John James, made denizen on the 19th December, 1567, and the other Anthony Emerick, made denizen the 1st January, 1574, both born under the dominion of Philip II. There were found, upon that survey, to be, of householders (denizens as well as others), their wives, children, and servants, one hundred and sixty-one in number, which, nevertheless, was less by half than it was some years before; for, in 1569, their number was 269."²

"In the year 1588, there being a loan charged by the Queen upon the city, the Companies of London subscribed separately. The Strangers also subscribed among them £ 4,900" in sums from £ 300 to £ 100.³

In 1589, soon after the death of the Duke of Leicester, heavy impositions were laid on the Strangers for the expenses of the siege of Bergen-op-Zoom. The Brethren in London, on paying, complained that they were under very heavy expenses to maintain five ministers and two ministers' widows, all their poor, and the expenses of the students, besides having to assist with money payments the Churches of Dover and Maidstone. These last payments do not appear in the list of collections for the poor of the various Churches, though, in 1588 and 1589, £ 56 were sent to the refugees of Ostende in Zeeland and £ 126 8s. 6d. for the town of Geneva.

On the 18th April, 1590, Sir Francis Walsingham, "Secretary of Her Majesty," died, "to the great grief of the Strangers, to whom he had always been a firm and steady friend."

In 1593, London was again stricken with a very severe attack of the plague, 1,700 dying in one week. At this time there was a rising of the citizens against the Strangers, whose houses were pillaged on the 1st of May. On the 5th May, 1593, these verses were affixed to the wall of the Dutch Church at Austin Friars;

" You Strangers that inhabit in this land !
 Note this same writing, do it understand ;
 Conceive it well, for safety of your lives,
 Your goods, your children, and your dearest wives."
 etc. etc.

By order of the Privy Council, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen gave orders for special constables to be sworn in from among the merchants and tradesmen. Some apprentices and servants who were found rioting "were put into the stocks, carted, and whipt."⁴

(¹) Among the Charities of the Church, payments were entered in 1587 for Captain Suderman £ 60, Captain van der Cruyce £ 92, and Captain Hunibert £ 200. These amounts were probably for officers and men, provided by the Church, and considered as charity towards the Fatherland as suggested by the Privy Council.

In 1596, the Strangers increased greatly in number at Southampton, and very many Strangers settled in the parish of St. Botolph, in Billingsgate Ward, London. In a presentment made, shortly before 1598, of the foreigners dwelling there it is stated as follows: "In Billingsgate Ward were one and fiftie households of Strangers; whereof thirty of these households inhabited in the parish of Saint Butolph in the chiefe and principal houses, where they give 20 pounds a year for an house lately letten for four markes. The neerer they dwell to the water-side, the more they give for houses; and within thirty yeeres before, there was not, in the whole Ward, above three Netherlanders, at which time there was within the said parish levied for the helpe of the poore seven and twenty pounds by the yeere; but since they came so plentifully thither, there cannot be gathered above eleven pounds: for the Strangers will not contribute to such charges as other citizens do."¹

In 1599, the City companies again much troubled the tradesmen who were Strangers, as they had done in like manner some four years before. These immediately petitioned the Queen, who ordered her Council to write the following letter to the Lord Mayor:

"After our hartly commendations to your Lordship, An humble peticion hath been exhibited unto her Majestic by divers poore Strangers and handicraft-men off the Dutch and French Congregation in the City off London, whereby they give her Majestic to understand that your Lordship will enforce them either to enter into bond, to forbear to work at all within the citye, or else to commit them to prison. Her Majestic understanding the course you mean to take with them, hath willed us to signifye unto you that her pleasure is, you should forbear to go forward in this your intention. And is't there bee any further matter, knowen to your Lordship, wherewith as yet wee are unacquainted, that doth make you to take this strickt course, then wee praye you to certify the same hither unto us, that we may consider off the same. And in the meane season to suffer them to use that favorable libertye wich hitherto they have enjoyed, and so wee bidd your Lordship farewell. Notwithstanding the action taken by the Privy Council, the suits against the Strangers were proceeded with in the City. These were, however, stayed by an order dated 31st October, 1601, sent by the Lord Treasurer, T. Buckhurst, to the Attorney-General.

In this year, Queen Elizabeth visited His Excellency, Heer Noel Caron, the Ambassador from the States, who resided at Clapham, on which occasion a short oration was made to her by Mr. Geleyn van Beste, an Elder of the Church.

On the 1st September, 1601, Jacobus Regius died. He had been the faithful and beloved minister of the Church for over twenty-five years. His son, Joannes Regius, alias Coninck, was received in his place, and shortly afterwards Simeon Ruytinck was nominated as the third minister. The latter wrote "the great book" or history of the Netherlanders in England from 1304 to the year 1620, when it was continued by Cæsar Calandrinus to 1625 and afterwards to 1627 by Æmilius van Culenborgh. An abridged history also exists in MS., 4^o, written by Ruytinck, which is dated "In London, 1 January, 1618."³

In 1602, letters having been received from the Church at Geneva, appealing to the charity of the Church in London, a collection was made after an earnest sermon by Assuerus Regemorterus, the result of which was that £ 310 19s. 3d. were sent to the brethren abroad who were in distress.

On the death of Queen Elizabeth, on the 23rd March, 1603, it was recorded by the Strangers that "she was truly a mother in Israel, a refuge for the Strangers, a helper to her neighbours, and famed throughout the world."

About this time letters were received by the Church from a nobleman in Ireland requesting that some of the Strangers should go to reside there, especially naming Crookhaven and Schoolhaven as suitable places, which offered many advantages.⁴

James I, being proclaimed King on the 17th May, 1603, a deputation from the foreign Churches, viz., London, Canterbury, Norwich, Southampton, Colchester, Sandwich, and Maidstone, was presented to him on the 23rd of the same month, at the Court held at Greenwich, who congratulated His Majesty on his accession to the throne; Monsieur de la Fonteyne, minister of the French Church, making the address in French. The King answered shortly to the effect that he would act well to the Strangers, who on account of religion had taken refuge in England, and in the same way that the late Queen had done.

In this year London suffered much on account of the numerous deaths from the plague; no less than 3,385 persons died in one week from that cause. By this severe visitation 370 houses of the members of the Dutch Church were struck, 52 families being entirely destroyed; the loss by death to the members was no less than 670 persons, among them being their beloved minister, Assuerus Regemorterus.¹

On the 14th January, 1604, a conference was held at Hampton Court, the King being present, concerning ceremonies and the government of the Church in England; the Archbishop and most of the Bishops assisted with many Doctors of Divinity. It is probable that some new light may be thrown on the discussions concerning this conference by the report given of the proceedings by Ruytinck in his MS.

In the following year the King came in state to London, passing from the Tower to Westminster, the route being adorned with triumphal arches. The members of the Church erected a very elaborate structure, 87 feet high and 37 wide, near the Exchange, designed by Christopher de Steur and Assuerus Regemorterus; the verses in Latin on each of the four sides being written by Monsieur Thorius, Jacob Cool, and Ruytinck. The architect was Coenraet Janszoon, and the chief decorators or painters were Daniel de Vos and Pauwel van Overbeke. It was draped with tapestry on satin, representing the King as risen like a phoenix from the ashes of the Queen; that the refugees from the seventeen provinces had taken refuge here, and that they had brought many new industries and trades to the country.

In this same year the foreign Churches formally congratulated Bancroft, Bishop of London, on his elevation to the See of Canterbury in the place of Archbishop Whitgift, who had died. In this year it was also arranged that the Dutch Church should yearly send a deputation to congratulate the newly-sworn Lord Mayor in a set speech, which, now that the corporation is so sorely threatened, may be appreciated if given at length:

“Right Honorable, Wee that compare here before your Honour are some of the Ministers and Elders off
 “the Dutch and French congregations in London. The end is, for to performe our duty off congratulations
 “in the name of our congregations (according to our yearly custome) unto your Honour whom itt hath “pleased God to call to that great dignitie, honour, and authoritye, to bee a chief magistrate off this “famous citee, under our most gracious King. Wee therefore pray the Almightye God in all humilitye
 “to make your Honour (by vertu off his holy Spiritt) fitt and sufficient for the full performance off all the “dutyies belonging to great a charge and calling, that so, by your faithfulness, the glory off God bee ad“vanced and his Church edifyed. Besydes, wee beseech your Honour (according unto the excmple off
 “your predecessors) to bee favorable unto us Strangers, members off the sayd congregations, fled hether
 “for the truth of Godspell and charytably entertained hitherto in this honorable Citie. We shall be bound
 “to pray the Lord continually, as hitherto we have done, for your honour, happy, godly, and just govern“ment, etc.”

In 1605 it was found necessary to repair the Church of Austin Friars within and without, and a collection was made for this purpose. The members of the French Church now again sought to set up pretensions to a share in the Church, under power (as they alleged) of the patent of Edward VI. This was successfully resisted, and a long protest made against any such idea by the members of the Dutch Church.

The Papist plot to blow up the Houses of Parliament had its due effect upon the Strangers; Ruytinck filled several pages in giving a long account of the affair, and he wrote besides 176 lines of poetry in Dutch on the subject.

In the same year was founded the library of the Church, and their learned minister wrote a long article on the desirability of doing so, specially mentioning that two registers would be kept; one in which to enter the books given to the library, with the names of their donors, and another with the books placed in alphabetical order, so that they might easily be found when required for use. This valuable library, which was greatly augmented by Marie Du Boijs² in 1650 and by later editions, together with the numerous autograph letters of the early reformers and others, was offered in 1862 by the Consistory of the Church, to be deposited in trust in the Guildhall library, so that the contents might more easily be accessible to the public. This offer was accepted by the Corporation of London on the 23rd July, 1863, the arrangement being finally settled by a deed signed on the 11th April, 1866. These books and manuscripts were most providentially saved from destruction during the fire that destroyed nearly all but the walls of the Church on the 22nd November, 1862, before the transfer of the library had taken place. An admirable catalogue of this collection has been made by Mr. Overall, the able librarian of the Corporation of the city of London, which was printed in 1879.

In 1606 the Common Council passed a resolution on the 15th April, founded on an old statute, that all foreign handycraftsmen, under a penalty of £ 5, should be prohibited from exercising their craft within the liberties of the city of London. The brethren petitioned the Crown, as they did formerly on a like occasion, finding that the Lord Mayor and Aldermen would pay no attention to their protests. Thanks to the assistance of the Earls of Salisbury and Dorset, to the great contentment of the Strangers, the Privy Council gave orders that the workmen should not be molested.

Certain persons were buried at an early date in the Church; it is recorded that Jacobus Godschalck, one of the ministers, having died suddenly of the plague on the 19th September, 1607, was interred there.

In 1609 the lofty and beautiful spire, that was on a portion of the Church which had not been made over to the Strangers, fell down for want of the necessary repair which had been earnestly pleaded for on the 4th August, 1600, by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen in a letter to the Marquis of Winchester, in which occurs the following extract: "That by disbursing of a small sum of money, of the value of £ 50 or £ 60, your Lordship shall do an excellent work, very helpfull to many, and most grateful to all, as well English as Strangers." It is recorded, however, "but this took little effect."¹ The Privy Council wrote a letter to the members of the Church, ordering them to rebuild the spire, but an answer was returned that the spire did not belong to that portion of the Church which was given to them by King Edward VI, though they would willingly give a contribution towards doing so. Afterwards the Marquis of Winchester sold the materials of the spire, with the portion of the choir on which it had stood, to Henry Robinson, an English merchant, who removed what remained of the spire and turned that portion of the chancel into a dwelling house."²

In 1611 the consistory of the Church bought, after considerable trouble, from the Marquis of Winchester for the sum of £ 600, a house called the "Kerckof", standing against the Church, with the houses adjoining: this property is still in the possession of the Church, and was some few years ago let on a building lease.³

"On the 27th November, 1610, a license was granted to the East India Company to admit merchant Strangers into their society, to trade and have the same privileges as natives of England."⁴

On the 8th April, 1612, Emanuel van Meteren died, aged 77. He had lived in this country since 1550 and had been connected with all matters that concerned the Strangers, having acted to the greatest satisfaction of the merchants as Netherland Consul. A clever and well-read man, he wrote the history of the Netherland wars which gives one of the best accounts of the desperate resistance of the patriots against the oppressions of their Spanish rulers.

By an order of the Privy Council, dated 17th October, 1612, the Strangers of the Dutch congregation at Colchester were confirmed in "all privileges, liberties, and immunities, and shall be permitted to use their assemblies and congregations in as free, large, and ample manner as hath bene heretofore practised, etc." "Wherefore we will, charge, and command all our Justices of the Peace, Bailifs, and Aldermen of our said town of Colchester to permit and suffer the said Strangers of the Dutch congregation in our said town of Colchester peacefully to governe, use, and enjoy all such liberties, immunities, and freedoms as are intended unto them by this our ordinance and grant without any inditements, presentments, or other molestations to be done unto them or any of them in any wise, etc."

In 1613 the Palsgrave, Frederick V, came to London to marry the King's daughter, the Princess Elizabeth, when Essex House was placed at his disposal and he was invested with the Order of the Garter. A deputation from the Dutch Church went immediately to congratulate him. It is related that the marriage took place in the Royal Chapel on the 14th February, 1613, with great state and rejoicings both on land and water.¹

In 1614 a certain knight, Sir Walter Chute, petitioned his Majesty to appoint him to "an office to be erected for enregistring of Strangers, with a fee to belong to the same office of one shilling sterling, to be payed yearlye for every such Stranger, etc." This the Stranger Churches strongly objected to, and sent in a counter petition in which they stated that at all "our congregations both here in London and elsewhere, as at Norwich, Cantelbury, Sandwich, Colchester, Southampton, and Yarmouth, there is a true register kept already off the communicants, both men and women," so that lists could always be furnished "without any charge att all to be imposed upon these poor people." They further pleaded "that laudable course alwayes observed in England aggreable to all other contries abroad, that Strangers live unter the protection of the magistrates of the severall townes in wich they abide, and nott under the command of any particular person, interessed only for his private profit." The final result was that Sir Julius Cæsar and Sir Thomas Parry were appointed Commissioners of the said office.²

On the 9th August, 1615, the Bishop of London made a formal complaint against the Dutch Churches in London and Colchester because certain of their numbers went to English Churches and presented themselves at the communion table, and were therefore protected by the English clergy. He requested that they should continue in their own Churches. Many young people who had been born in this country thought fit, however, to go to worship where they pleased.

At this time there were renewed troubles about the Strangers exercising their trades in the various towns where they were established, neither they nor their children born in England being able to obtain the freedom of the towns for love or money. The Ambassador of the States, Sir Noel Caron, interceded for them with the King, who on the 30th June, 1616, issued an order that as "those Strangers are dayly and greevously molested and debarred from their worke and labor by sundrye troublesome informers, because the sayd Strangers are nott free off the city, nor have served seaven yeares prentiship," "These are therefore to will and command all our Courts of Justice, etc., to permit and suffer the sayd Strangers, members of the outlandish Churches and their children, to enjoy the continuance of the said favors, etc." Great dissatisfaction arising in the various towns on the appearance of this order, the Strangers set forth a long relation shewing how they benefitted the country and the towns of their adoption, entitled "A shorte and true relation off the state off the Netherlanders in England against divers greevous accusations off late, by misinformation, layd to their charge."³

In the beginning of 1617 the Austin Friars Church was repaired and put in order at a cost of £ 1,500, which amount was collected by subscription. The King desiring to go to Scotland in this year raised money on loan for that purpose, to which the Dutch merchants and other members of the Church placed their names for the amount of £ 20,000, security appearing to have been given by the members of the Privy Council.

Ruytinck gave particulars of the imprisonment and the execution of Sir Walter Raleigh on 28th October, 1618; he also recorded the following verses written by one of his captains on his death:

"Cease bootlesse teares to weep for him, whose death
 "Mayde way to haeven, for his that lent him breath.
 "Long lidd hee captive, now at libertie,
 "His world of woes turu'd to felicitie.
 "What, is hee gone? No, wee enjoy him still,
 "That learned worke, the laurell of his quill,
 "Shall live and blaze his fame; those only die
 "That leave no record to posteritie.
 "The end the life, the evening crownes the day.
 "For, Samson like his death doth vainquish more "Than all his lifetyme hee had done before."

There was at this time a demand on the part of the Bishop of Norwich that the Members of the Stran-

the King's ministers had signed bonds of security they, as well as the lenders of the money, had become anxious about the repayment of principal and interest. The King sent the instruction of the Envoy and the supplication of the Strangers to the Solicitor-General, who immediately pushed on proceedings and issued a writ of ne exeas regno. The bail demanded for each defendant, 40 in number, was fixed at £2,000, which if not found, the prison of Newgate had to be taken as a residence. This sharp practice was strongly remonstrated against by Sir Noel Caron and the members of the Church. They represented that by the issue of the writ "your sayd suppliants are discredited, both at home and abroad, as if they were fugitifs and did intend upon malice to voyde the realme."

All was useless; the proceedings took their course and a number of disreputable witnesses, "bankrupts, beggars, thieves, rogues, and such like," swore that the merchant Strangers had sent no less than £2,740,000 in three years out of the country. The answer to this was, that no such sum had been coined in that period. It was also proved that one of the witnesses, by name Escaillet, a dissolute Walloon, had revealed how he had been released from jail by some of the agents concerned in the scheme, who paid his execution of £15 and who offered him rewards if he would give the evidence desired. It was demanded that these witnesses should all be cross-examined by counsel; this, however, was against the practice in the Star Chamber, where those accused were only allowed to give written answers on oath to the evidence against them, and that in due form by counsel.

On the 17th June, 1619, the King being informed that there was no great amount of evidence, wrote from Whitehall to the Judges that, understanding there were 160 persons charged by the Attorney General and that evidence was only produced against 18 or 19 of the delinquents, "wee have nott found itt fitt to proceed in a cause so exemplarie, and of so great importance by pesle mesle, or by fractions, butt rather there by to require you to putt over the sentencing thereof, till all the defendants may receive their judgement simul and semul, so as both the greatnes and the correction of the offence may bee more conspicuous, and our princely justice more publickly represented in the whole grosse and number of th'offenders, being all associated in the censure as in the crime, and in our sayd Attorney's bill. And so, not doubting of our discreet respect and care therein, wee bid you farewell."

The "princely justice" of the period by this time had become known to the Strangers, who moved heaven and earth to obtain real justice. The government in Holland, as well as the merchants there, took the matter up, for universal ruin impended over all the merchants trading between the two countries; letters being written to all persons of importance likely to help the Strangers. But all to no purpose, the Solicitor-General alleged that at least £7,000,000 of coin and bullion had been sent out of the country by the foreign merchants against the royal prerogative, statutes and proclamations. The evidence produced against some of the defendants was of a period before they had come to this country; they were in despair, the expenses for legal assistance and counsel being so very heavy that they found difficulty even in getting copies of the proceedings.

The Ambassador Caron laid before the King a carefully drawn up statement, shewing the impossibility of the truth of the evidence and also of the character of the witnesses. All to no effect; the judges, thirteen in number, pronounced all guilty and condemned the following persons to pay fines, viz.

Courten	£ 20,000	J. Wolf	£ 5,000
Burlamachi	2,000	Zwester	4,000
Van de Putte	3,000	Rijckman	2,000
La Barre	20,000	Robert de Leau	20,000
Wybo	6,000	Stampeel	4,000
Trioen	15,000	Lievens	2,000
P. van Loor	8,000	Luls	8,000
Jacques de Beste	7,000	Clerck	2,000
Ph. Jacobs	5,000	Ant. Trioen	5,000

London was in an uproar; the victims, being sentenced, had to pay or after a short period to be sent to the Fleet prison. Their goods were seized, their bails were estreated, and everything was carried out with the greatest rigour. Petitions from all quarters came in to the King appealing to his clemency. Langele came over at the commencement of 1620 with letters from the States of Holland and from Carleton, the English Ambassador at Hague, who sent special letters on the subject. It was represented to the Privy Council that some of the merchant Strangers "are hardly able to pay their fines; many forswear the facts," and P. van Lore declared that he would leave England, "for those who on such evidence take away his goods, may take away his life if they chose, and that the whole affair would be injurious both in England and to the English abroad."¹

Caron again interceded with the King at Easter time, when it was arranged that the fines should be reduced to £ 60,000. Those fined paid £ 34,000, with the exception of Van Lore, de Quester, Burlamachie, and Gillis van de Putte,² who were reserved to be dealt with according to the King's pleasure. The loan of £ 20,000, with overdue interest amounting to £ 6,000, made up the required amount. On this settlement being made, Caron gave up the security that he had received from the King.

Fresh difficulties now arose as to the respective amounts due to the merchants on account of the loan, and as to the portions of fines remitted; the seizure of the goods of all those fined being still maintained. Some of the witnesses confessed publicly on the Exchange that they had sworn falsely.

On the 3rd January, 1621, Simeon Ruytinck died, having only about a week before preached on Christmas Day. He was a great loss to the Church, being eager and active in all good works. Verses were written to his remembrance by many, in Latin and Dutch, which were collected and published by Izaak Elzevier, at Leyden.³ Besides writing the history of the more remarkable events of the Dutch Strangers and Church in London, he left behind him seven works published during his lifetime.

On the 7th January, 1630, the Privy Council had before them a complaint from the Church at Norwich "which had continued a congregation in that citty by itselſe for the space of 60 yeares and more," to the effect that many of their richer members wished to leave the congregation in order to be relieved from the burden of the subscriptions and the support of the Dutch poor, contrary to the order of Council of the 10th October, 1621, "for redresse of the like evil attempted by some of the Wallon congregation." The Privy Council ordered that the said decree should be enforced against all members of the Dutch Church, "although borne within this kingdom," "provided that nothing in this order contained have relation to Matthew de "Boys, or doe any way binde him, he having formerly had sufficient license for his removall out of the "Dutch congregation: onely he is to contribute to the poor of the Dutch congregation."⁴

A few months later the Star Chamber trouble recommenced. Sir Noel Caron, having disbursed £ 26,000 of his own money on account of the merchants in order to discharge their several fines, desired repayment. This was not forthcoming, and there was no other course for him but to appeal again to the King; this time, however, for himself. The Privy Council on the 5th July, 1621, wrote to their "verie loving friends," the ministers, elders, deacons, and the rest of the Dutch Church to arrange with those of the French Church that they might agree among themselves to do what in their "owne discretions shall be equal and reasonable for the leavying and present satisfaction" of the amount due to the Ambassador. The natural answer of the Church, as a body, was to "informe their Lordships that the agreement of that great sum of £ 60,000 was never caused or procured by the meanes of persuasion of our Church." It begged, therefore, to be discharged "from the burden of such a business." The answer to this was that the excuse was not sufficient, and that the amount must be raised voluntarily or by a levy. Extraordinary Ambassadors having been sent by the States' General to London to arrange a payment of 800,000 guilders due by the Dutch East India Company to that of England, Caron referred to them the matter of the £ 26,000, of which he was out of pocket and responsible for in the State robbery of the Strangers. So the affair remained until 18th June, 1624, when the Ambassador induced the Privy Council to write again to the members of the Church, whose answer was to refer the Council to their former letter of 21st July, 1621, and to state also that Sir Noel Caron had employed one Mr. Henry Wood as his agent, therefore they begged to be excused from a business which would make "our persons very odious and our ministry unfruitfull." It is related in the manuscript history, continued by Calandrinus, that "the good Mr. Caron died at the end of this "year (1624): he had done great good to the Fatherland," but no more is said of how he or his executors fared in the matter of the £ 26,000.

In March, 1622, a new Dutch congregation, under the rule of the Church in London, met together at Mortlake for the convenience of the Flemish tapestry weavers who had come from the tapestry works at Paris, established by Henry IV, and elsewhere in the previous year to the factory built about 1619 on the banks of the Thames by Sir Francis Crane, Kt. He had obtained a license dated 20th March, 1621, (O.S.) from the Archbishop of Canterbury, for this congregation to assemble in the parish Church of Mortlake, at Sir Francis Crane's house, or in any other suitable place. It was arranged that a minister and an Elder should be sent from London, when it was requisite, to perform the service. Many baptisms and some marriages of the Mortlake congregation were entered in the registers of Austin Friars and, at a later date, in the parish registers of Mortlake.

On 8th July, 1623, James I wrote to the King of Denmark to request that Francis Klein or Cleyne, a painter and a native of Rostock, might be allowed to come to England as soon as his services could be dispensed with. He arrived in London at the close of the year with his family and was given a gratuity of £ 100 a year by the King and his successor until the beginning of the civil wars. He was employed at the Mortlake tapestry works, "his designing being the soul, as the working is the body of that mystery."¹ Charles I granted an annuity of £ 2,000 for ten years, one moiety in payment of tapestry work and the other for the advancement and maintenance of the factory.² The five cartoons of Rafaele in tapestry work, now at Hampton Court, were copied from the original designs of that artist, which had been specially bought by the King as patterns. In a petition made about 1637 by the weavers who were nearly all from the Low Countries, it would appear that they were about one hundred and forty in number.³

In a survey made in September, 1651, by the Parliamentary Commissioners, the extent of these premises at Mortlake, situated in Queen's Head Court, is given, part of which still is standing, having been purchased and turned into small dwelling houses by Mr. Wigan of Cromwell House, Mortlake. The factory had been surrendered to the King by Sir Richard Crane, the brother of Sir Francis, then deceased, and was seized by the Commissioners as Crown property in the time of the Commonwealth. During that period the tapestry house remained in the occupation of John Holliburie (Hullenberge) who in the survey is mentioned as the master-workman.

The numbers of the Strangers in England had greatly increased by 1621, when those in London were stated to be ten thousand in number, carrying on 121 different trades.⁴

The industry of the refugees caused much interference with the trade of the citizens, who harassed them in every possible way by laying informations against them, so the Strangers wrote to the King in 1622, stating that they had paid contributions both to the parishes and to their own congregations, that they bore offices in both, that they paid duties to their halls and double ones to their Parish Churches, and that they kept their own poor, many in number, from begging in the streets. They therefore petitioned to be relieved from persecution by the Corporation of London according to the King's "whryting" dated June, 1616. The answer from the King, 8th June, 1622, informed them that "Commissioners in whome we put "confidence" had been appointed, "to which wee wish the Peticioners to conforme themselves without "troubling us further in that whereof we are resolved." The result was that the poor Strangers had the following new taxes imposed on them, viz. "of handicraftsmen, for each master of a family, 40 sh. per annum, and fore every servant, being a Stranger, 20 sh. per annum, and for every servant, being English "and not bound for seven years by Indenture, 10 sh. per annum, and of merchants using exportacion and "importation of goods, fore each master, 26 sh. 8d. per annum.and the value of half the custome "of the goods they buy and sell." On renewed petitions to the King, the above taxes were suspended until further orders, according to an order of Council, dated 7th March, 1622. In other towns the impositions on the Strangers had been heavy.

In March, 1620, the congregation at Norwich petitioned the Council that the English householders should pay twenty pence in the pound on their house rents for support of their ministers, as was paid by them.⁵

At this period there were Commissioners for the regulation of the Strangers, whose duty it was to enforce all the laws and orders concerning them and to see that the returns of their names, residences, and occupations were duly sent in.⁶

In June, 1621, it was proposed that the Strangers should pay twelve pence in the pound on their profits of trade;¹ that each householder should also pay annually twelve pence, and all others above seven years old six pence, as registration fees.²

In 1624, there was much trouble about the new tax, called Pirate Money, to be applied in suppressing the pirates of Algiers and Tunis, of one per cent. on all sales, which the English merchants did not collect until nine months after the King's order, though the Strangers had done so immediately. The latter considered that their collections, which had not been handed over, should go towards the Star Chamber business and that all should start fairly together. This arrangement was soon discovered, and, five or six years afterwards, the sum of £ 1,600 so applied was claimed by the Treasury.

It is put on record by Calandrinus that the "learned King James died in 1625"; no lamentations apparently being made by the Strangers who had been fleeced to the uttermost by His Majesty. Monsieur Gilbert Primerose, minister of the French Church, on behalf of the deputation of ministers and Elders of the foreign Churches, congratulated Charles I on his accession in a long and laudatory oration, in which the protection of the King was duly prayed for. This was granted in a few words.

On the occasion of the royal entry of the King and Queen into London in February, 1626, an elaborate triumphal arch was erected as before by the Dutch congregation in the centre of "Gracious Street," the designer of it being Bernard Jansen." Then, as at the time of the accession of James I, the numerous deaths from the plague caused a diminution of the public rejoicings, the Dutch congregation suffering severely as at the last visitation.

About this time, by the consent of the Archbishop, the Churches of the Spaniards and Italians in London were united into one congregation.

Sir Henry Appleton, who had property in Canvey Island, in Essex, near to Southend, which had belonged to his grandfather Sir Roger Appleton in 1557, together with other proprietors "agreed to give one third "of the island in fee simple to Joas Croppenburgh, a Dutchman, in consideration of his securing the island "from the overflowing of the tides of the river Thames."⁴

On the 12th February, 1628, Croppenburgh and the two hundred poor Netherland Strangers, engaged for some few years previously in banking and cultivating this island, petitioned the King, praying for a reference to the Bishop of London, as they required permission to establish a small Church where service could be performed in their own language. The King granted the request, and Montaigne, Bishop of London, requested the Dutch congregation in London to appoint a minister. This was done, and a wooden chapel was erected. In 1712, it having become decayed, a new one was built by Mr. Edgar, an officer in the victualling office. In 1745 the present Church was erected, partly by a contribution of the inhabitants, but chiefly by a benefaction of Daniel Scratton, Esq., owner of property at Prittlewell. The latter endowed the Church with £ 20 a year to enable the vicar of Prittlewell and his curate to preach twenty sermons yearly in the chapel on the island.⁵

At the Synod held in London 1641, Cornelis Jacobsen, minister of the chapel, represented the congregation of Canvey Island. At those of 1644 and 1646 Abraham van der Bossche; and in 1647 Daniel Keteelaar. In 1655 the chapel being without a minister, Joannes Beutacq was provisionally appointed; he, however, being accused of scandal, and the matter brought before the Synod held in London in 1655, was suspended and condemned. An extraordinary Synod was held in the following January to consider the cases of Beutacq and Joannes Aiton, the latter having caused trouble in the Church at Sandwich. The matter of Canvey Island was so far arranged that Beutacq was allowed to go in peace if he would cease annoying in any way the Church there.⁶

In 1622 an arrangement was made between the King, certain proprietors, and Cornelius Liens and Cornelius Vermuyden, the latter a Dutch engineer skilled in such works, to drain 360,000 acres of fen land in the counties of Northampton, Lincoln, Cambridge, and Essex. The owners of the fen land granted to the King 120,000 acres, reserving 50,000 acres for themselves and setting aside 20,000 acres to supply the funds necessary to keep the remainder perpetually dry.⁷ In the following year the Commissioners of Sewers in Essex complained to the Council that Vermuyden had made the state of the land worse than before.⁸ On the 16th July, 1625, Cornelius Vermuyden received a grant of land in Essex in recompense of his charges for work done in the repair of Dagenham Breach.¹ In 1626 he undertook to drain 70,000 acres of fen land in the levels of Hatfield Chase, near to the river Humber. The capital being found in Holland, Flemish and French refugees were engaged as labourers. Troubles soon arose between the workmen and the adjoining landowners, as well as the fishermen and the men who caught and shot wildfowl; these broke the embankments and attacked the workmen, who killed an Englishman. Vermuyden then prudently employed some native labourers and compensated those whose interests were affected. Charles de la Pryme, or Priem, who was born at Ypres (grandfather of the Rev. Abraham de la Pryme, B.A., F.R.S., whose interesting diary has been published by the Surtees Society) was associated with Vermuyden in this great work. It is recorded that the latter "at the incredible labor and charges of £400,000 did discharge and drain Hatfield Chase, whose name deserves a thousand times more to be honorably mentioned and revered in all our histories than Scæurus was in those of Rome, for draining a lake in Italy, not a quarter so big as this."² Matthew, Mark, and Luke Valkenburgh also had a largo share in the venture and owned 3,204 acres of the reclaimed land.³

In 1629 Cornelius Vermuyden was knighted, and a grant of the land recovered was given to him on payment of a yearly rent and a fine of £10,000.⁴ In the grant that Sir Cornelius Vermuyden took of the manor and chase at Hatfield, he had the power to erect a building for religious purposes where the foreign workmen might have service performed in their own language. A chapel was erected in 1634 at Sandtoft, a hamlet in the parish of Belton, in Lincolnshire, close to the borders of Yorkshire. It was built by Isaac Bedloe, a merchant, who lost much of the money expended, it not being repaid to him. The first minister was M. Berchett, who died 18th April, 1655; he was succeeded by Philippe Castel, of Nantes, who died 5th September, 1655; Jean Deckerhuel was minister in 1659; after him M. de la Prix; Samuel Lamber in 1661; Jacques de la Porte in 1676; and finally John Conrad de Werneley or Werdley in 1681, after which date the services appear to have been discontinued.⁵ It would appear that this chapel was erected by the foreign workmen, some two hundred families, who baptized their children and received the sacrament in it, but Archbishop Niolo compelled them to discharge their minister and to attend the parish Churches.⁶ The Register of this chapel at Sandtoft, which was in existence when Mr. Hunter wrote in 1828, is not now to be found.⁷

"About the year 1638-9 the Levels of Aucham (Aucholme) were drained by the instigation of the Dutch, several of whom were overseers in the business." "The great sluice that they built at Feriby cost above £3,000, and had twenty four doors."⁸

Vermuyden then undertook the drainage of the Great Level, which spread round the Isle of Ely, some 36,000 acres being covered by the overflow of the water. The Earl of Bedford and his partners were ousted from the work by Commissioners appointed, a grant of land being given to them as compensation. The King took the matter into his own hands, and Vermuyden was re-appointed to manage the necessary works.⁹

About the year 1637, by arrangements made with the postmasters abroad, "the post system was extended beyond the Channel, and merchants were able to send a single letter to Antwerp for eightpence and to Paris for ninepence."¹⁰

In 1640 the Dutch and French merchants were asked to lend money to the Crown, but remembering their late treatment refused to do so. A new imposition of three pence in the pound was therefore made on the goods of the Strangers in the port of London. By a docket, dated 28th February, 1640, a charge on the impositions for the years 1640 and 1641 was granted to the Earl of Newcastle and his assigns for £10,000, that sum having been lent to His Majesty with interest at 8 per cent. A similar charge was made in favor of the Secretary Windebank for £3,000, also lent to His Majesty at the same rate.¹¹

Archbishop Laud attempted to annul the religious privileges of the Strangers; and an order was made on the 24th March, 1641-2, that there should be no more preaching or divine service at the Dutch Church at Great Yarmouth. This did not suit the Bailiffs and Aldermen of that town, who thought that the trade the Dutchmen had brought would soon be lost by their departure. so they, on the 31st March, 1611, petitioned the King to annul the order, made a week before, to discontinue the service at the Dutch Church which was a house formerly belonging to Thomas de Drayton, temp. Edward III., and had been used for that purpose for forty years.¹ On behalf of all the Strangers' Churches, complaint was made to the Privy Council of the action of the Archbishop who, since 1633, had interfered with their charter of exemption from interference in their Church government, granted by Edward VI and renewed by his successor and the then King. The injunctions delivered April 13th, 1635, aimed at making the Strangers' Churches conform to the Church of England. These were, "1st, that all the natives of the Dutch and Walloon congregations in his Grace's diocese are to resort to their several parish Churches to hear divine service and sermons, and to perform all duties required of parishioners. 2nd, that the ministers and all others of the Dutch and Walloon congregations, who are not natives and born subjects to the King, or any other Strangers that shall come over, while they remain Strangers, may use their own discipline as formerly; yet it is thought fit the English liturgy should be translated into French and Dutch for the better fitting of their children to the English Church government."²

The members of the Dutch and Walloon or French Churches at Norwich petitioned Archbishop Laud on the 21st February, 1635, n.s., through Dr. Richard Montague, Bishop of Norwich, and again directly on the 26th June, that the injunctions lately issued by his Grace to the three congregations of Strangers at Canterbury, Sandwich, and Maidstone should be withdrawn.

The evil results, financially, both to the Strangers and to the towns where they dwelt were duly pointed out, as the charge of the poor would be thrown on the parishes, to say nothing of the horror felt at the idea of observing rites and ceremonies that they were not acquainted with, "yea, are offensive to some beyond the seas, from whence they shall be called." The answer given by Laud, on the 19th August of the same year, was that the children of the aliens might continue in the congregations, but that the second descent born in England should resort to their several parish Churches.³

These troubles somewhat ceased on the impeachment of Laud in December, 1640, but it was considered necessary to apply for an Act of Parliament to finally settle the position of the foreign Churches. In a draft of the Act presented to Parliament in 1642 the following Churches are named: London, Norwich, Canterbury, Colchester, Sandwich, Yarmouth, Southampton, Maidstone, and the Isle of Canvey, the Isle of Axolme in Lincolnshire, and (Hatfield Chase) in the County of York. In the same act there was a clause to the following effect: "Fore as much as in the said foraigne Churches there is noe use of licenses for marriage nor ought there any marriages to be there solemnized without publishing of bannes, whereby children and inferiors are kept in better awe of their parents and guardians, not dareinge to mary without their consents, and divers other abuses prevented. Bee it enacted by the authority aforesaid, that noe Bishop or other minister or officer of any ecclesiasticall court of this kingdom of England shall give or grant any license of marriage to or for any member of the said foraine reformed Churches."

A request was also made to the House of Lords "in the behalfe of the reformed Forreine Churches in the realme" on the 21st January, 1642-3, "that there may be an ordinance of Parliament for settling of the liberty and exercise of their religion and discipline as they are used beyond the seas respectively in the reformed Churches of their severall nations, which they have hitherto enjoyed by the charter of King Edward VI (of ever blessed memory) authorized by his Parliament and the gracious favor of all our succeeding Princes of the reformed religion, Queen Elizabeth, King James, and His Majestic that now is, King Charles, whome God long preserve. In particular, 1.—That they may have free liberty to chose and ordaine their own ministers and all other officers belonging to their Churches according to their discipline. 2.—That no member of their congregations, being under the censure of their discipline by reason of some scandalous offence committed, be received as member of any other Church without a certificate from his own Church. 3.—That no Church or congregation of Forreiners be authorized in this realme who are not subject respectively to the Synods of their severall nations."

The following answer was returned by their Lordships: "Die Sabbathi, 21 January, 1642. (O.S.). "The House being petitioned by two severall petitions, the one from the members of the French Church in London, subscribed to the said petition, and the other from the ministers and elders of the Dutch and French congregation within the city of London; both which petitions were referred to the consideration of the Lords' Committees perticularly appointed by the House, whose Lordships having mett and heard

“Signed, Jo: Browne, Cleric Parliamentore.”

On the report of the Earl of Northumberland, a similar entry was made on the same day in the book of the proceedings of the House of Lords.

In the beginning of October, 1645, the Parliament ordered a solemn thanksgiving-day for “the great victories given by the Lord” at Bristol, Devizes, in Scotland, and near Chester; this was duly observed by the Church at Austin Friars. On Thursday, 7th May, 1646, another thanksgiving-day was appointed to be everywhere kept “for the victories that God lately has vouchsafed to our armies” at Exeter, Banbury, Newark, and elsewhere. On November 28th, 1647, thanks were returned in the Dutch Church for the victory in Ireland. In February, 1657, thanks were returned for the delivery of “his Highness the Lord Protector” from great danger.¹

On the death of Oliver Cromwell, the foreign Churches congratulated Richard Cromwell on his accession as Lord Protector, who returned, 4th October, 1658, the following characteristic answer to the deputation: “Gentlemen, Your expressions are of the best of Christians, concerning your losse and mine. It is indeed a great losse for you, for me, and for all the Protestant Churches. God alone is he that can make up that breach. Your expressions oblige me to be your friend. For your good wishes and prayers I owe you love. I look upon you as the heads and fathers of the severall ferrein Churches which you represent. As Strangers you are to be pittied and as Christian Strangers you are to be valued. You are members of Christ and I hope so am I. I will love you as I love myselfe. Christ is the master, and the magistrate is but a servant. And shall a servant lift up himselfe against his master? Shall I hurt my hand? Much lesse suffer a member of Christ to be injured. I must confesse I am somewhat surprized to enlargeth upon such a discourse as yours; but I shall wrap up all in this. You may be confident that I will maintaine you in your persons and in your liberties, religious and civill: and if any will hurt you I will defend you. And I will also procure the liberty of the afflicted Churches abroad. We are in the same bottom, and I shall bid defiance to all your and mine enemies.”²

On the 6th November, 1659, a collection was made for the restoration of the Austin Friars Church.

The majority of the Dutch congregation in London sympathised with the Parliamentary side, though there were some thirty Strangers who, in 1660, petitioned the King through Edward Love for denization, on account of their loyalty in late times.³

On the accession of Charles II, the ministers of the Dutch Church were quite equal to the occasion, and prayed with their congregation on the 28th June, 1660, more fervently than ever, and gave thanks to the Lord for the blessed restoration.⁴ All the Strangers who could prove their loyalty to the throne during the Commonwealth came forward to ask for letters of denization, which were granted more freely than hitherto.

In the Act of Uniformity, made 13 and 14 Charles II, provision was made and a clause inserted in favour of the Dutch and French protestant Churches in England. It was felt, however, that this did not sufficiently make the foreign Churches secure from the penalties to which dissenters from the Church of England were liable. A case for the foreign Churches was drawn up and printed for presentation to Parliament, praying that “a proviso or clause may be added to a bill then depending for preventing the growth of schism and for the further security of the Church of England,” which would free those congregations from the penalties imposed on dissenters, and would enable them to continue their services in the Dutch and French languages.

The destruction by the great fire of the greater part of London in 1666 brought serious trouble to the greatly decreased in number. The times had become quieter abroad so that many returned to the Netherlands taking with them certificates of having been members of the foreign congregations in England, which enabled them to join the Churches of the towns they settled in. Others went to the services of their parish Churches.

On the 4th February, 1672-3, an Act for the naturalisation of "any person being a Christian, though born beyond the seas under foreign jurisdiction" was brought into the House of Lords. This was the result of the "great advantage found during the reign of some of your Majesty's royal predecessors, by the manufactures which, having been taught by foreigners have since been practised to the great and visible improvement of the riches of this your Majesty's kingdom."

An amendment was made in Committee, 27th March, which limited the benefit of the act to persons naturalized within five years from the 25th March, 1673-4. Another amendment required justices to cause the names of persons naturalized under the Act to be registered at the next General Quarter Sessions.¹ When naturalized it was necessary for proof to be produced of their having received the sacrament according to the usage of the Church of England.

Many of the Strangers had become very wealthy by careful habits and successful trading, and as soon as qualified by naturalization or by becoming English by birth, bought landed estates in various parts of the country. The children of the more wealthy aliens generally allied themselves by marriage with English families, and soon their names alone betrayed their foreign descent, and these in some cases had become English by altered spelling.

The coming to England of William, Prince of Orange,² the great grandson of William I, who had so successfully resisted the tyranny of Philip II, and freed the States of Holland from the Spanish yoke, was hailed with joy by the descendants of the Netherland refugees. Their numbers were greatly augmented by the host of Dutchmen of all conditions who came with him and followed his footsteps on his accession to the throne. These were soon advanced to fame and fortune, obtaining high appointments in the army and navy, and, in consequence, great odium and ill will was shewn to all the Dutch living in England.

In 1694 a Bill was brought into Parliament for naturalizing all Protestant aliens, which was dropped after being read a second time. Sir John Knight, M.P. for Bristol, represented himself to have made an amendment "That the Sergeant be commanded to open the doors, and let us first kick the Bill out of the House and then foreigners out of the kingdom."³

It was probably in opposition to this Bill that the Corporation drew up and printed "The Case of the city of London in relation to the Bill for a general naturalization of all foreign Protestants,"⁴ which entered minutely into the history of all the rights, liberties, and privileges claimed by the mayor, commonalty, and citizens of London, confirmed to them as asserted, not only by the Statute of Magna Charta, but by the Statutes of 1 and 2 Edward III, 7 Richard II, 2 Edward IV, letters patent, 20th Jun., 18 Edward IV, Rot. Claus. 12 Hen. VI, M. 18 dorso., 4 Henry VIII, 22 Henry VIII, cap 8, 12 Car. II, by which the "officers of package, scavage, balliage, and portage of any goods or merchandizes of aliens, or their sons born within this kingdom, or unfreemen, imported or exported into or out of the city of London, or the liberties or ports thereof, unto or from the parts beyond the seas, etc." were "ancient duties, anciently and rightfully due to the Mayor and Commonalty and citizens of the city of London, that if the Bill for a general naturalization of all foreign Protestants now depending pass into law, the said duties will be entirely lost," etc., etc.

The King's partiality to his countrymen caused great jealousy, which was referred to by Defoe in "The True-born Englishman."

"We blame the King that he relies too much
On Strangers, Germans, Hugonots, and Dutch,
And seldom does his just affairs of State
To English Councillors communicate.
The fact might well be answer'd thus:
He has so often been betrayed by us.
He must have been a madman to rely
On English gentlemen's fidelity,
For (laying other argument aside),
This thought might mortify our English pride,
That foreigners have faithfully obey'd him,
And none but Englishmen have e'er betray'd him."⁵

King William III, wishing to establish the manufactory of linen in Ireland, invited Louis Crommelin from Holland in 1698, who was then living at Amsterdam, the head quarters of the extensive linen trade that had been carried on with so great success for very many years, cargoes being exported regularly to England, France, and other countries. Du Pin had started a corporation to carry on this manufacture in Ireland in 1692, by power of letters patent from the King and Queen, but there was so much discord between the shareholders that it was soon discontinued.¹ By 17th and 18th Car. II, cap. 9, Irish acts, landlords and tenants were obliged under penalty to cultivate a certain porportion of the land with flax; the Sheriffs were empowered to levy for twenty years £20 in each county for prizes to those who produced the three best webs of cloth. This was extended for ten years more by a subsequent act.²

Crommelin with his family first settled at Lisnagarvey, and afterwards at Lisburn, co. Antrim, and obtained a patent from the King which granted “£800 per annum for ten years as interest” on £10,000 advanced by Crommelin and his friends for starting the venture. In addition to this sum “a pension of £200 a year to Crommelin, £40 to each of his three assistants, and £60 for a French minister.” “Crommelin brought from Holland 1000 looms and spinning wheels of an improved construction, and invited a number of families (in general Huguenot refugees like himself), who complied and soon founded quite a colony among themselves.”³

“Queen Anne’s government issued a new patent which did indeed retain the same grand total of £1,180 per annum but re-distributed it.” Crommelin was afterwards formally appointed as overseer of the Royal linen manufacture of Ireland, and devoted himself to “mind the public and continue his care in promoting the good of the kingdom.”⁴ The successful issue of the linen trade which brought such wealth to the north of Ireland was thus due to the French refugees to Holland who there learnt that manufacture for which Holland had been so long famed.

Soon after the arrival of King William III in London, a Dutch Chapel Royal was established at St. James’ Palace in 1689; £160 being paid annually, and included in the King’s Pension List, for each of the two Ministers appointed to do the duty, and about £20 for bread and wine for the Sacrament and other expenses. Service was there continued in Dutch until the year 1809, when it was discontinued.⁵ A legacy was left by the late Sir Charles Barrow, Bart.,⁶ the income of which was to be distributed to the poor of the Dutch Chapel Royal. This so-called Oliverian legacy was created by an assignment of Sir Charles Barrow to Messrs. Meier, Zornlin, and Waide for a term of ninety years. By an order No. N, 793, 24th September, 1708, it was levied at the receipt of His Majesty’s Exchequer at Westminster.⁷

No record can be found of the address made to King William III by the Dutch congregation in London, which, according to custom and especially on account of his nationality, must have been duly delivered.

On the 14th February, 1709, a Bill for the naturalization of foreign Protestants was brought into the House of Commons, which received the royal assent on the 23rd March, 1709, there being a proviso “that no person shall be naturalized, etc., unless he shall have received the sacrament in some Protestant or reformed congregation within this kingdom.” This act was repealed on the 9th February, 1712.⁸

When the Bill,⁹ “for preventing the growth of Schism and for the further security of the Church of England, etc.” was brought before Parliament in the reign of Queen Anne, the Dutch and French Protestant Churches strongly opposed it. A case was carefully drawn up which represented “that they were first allowed and established in the reign of King Edward the VI, and afterwards in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and have now continued in this nation for above 160 years.” “That they have introduced into this Realm several very great and profitable manufactures.” “That they have always continued very dutiful and loyal to the Crown and Government.” “That in the act of uniformity, made in the 13th and 14th years of King Charles II, there is provision made and a clause inserted in favour of the said Churches.” “That by the Bill depending those that shall be present at the publick worship of the said Dutch and French Churches may be liable to the Incapacities in the said Bill mentioned, unless a clause be inserted for their exemption.” “Wherefore it is humbly hoped that a proviso or clause may be added for that purpose, they performing their exercise in the Dutch and French languages.”

On the coronation of King George I in 1714, the following address from the foreign Churches was presented to His Majesty in the Dutch language by Mr. Theodore Bolton, one of the ministers of the Austin Friars Church, who was introduced by Viscount Townshend, one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State.

“The most humble address of the Ministers and Elders of the French and Low-Dutch Churches, established here by King Edward the 6th, and confirmed by Queen Elizabeth.”

“MOST ILLUSTRIOUS GREAT AND MOST MIGHTY KING,

“Your sacred head being adorned with the royal crown of these powerful kingdoms having filled all the Protestants of Europe with such a joy, that the French and Dutch Churches in London presume also with the greatest humility to cast themselves at your Majesty's feet, and amidst the universal acclamations of your faithful subjects, to testify the unexpressible joy of their souls, and to open their lips in a dutiful thanksgiving to the great God, who hath at so seasonable a time given them a King in whom virtue, religion, justice, faithfulness, wisdom, and courage shine in their greatest glory, and by whose presence the minds of all well-meaning persons are revived and delivered from their just fear of those evils that threatned them: so that now we have a well-grounded hope that religion, liberty, and commerce, being animated as with a new spirit, may again flourish and prosper.

“We pray, Sire, the great King of all Kings, that he who hath brought you safe to us will farther bless your reign so happily commenced with length of days, establish your throne in righteousness and peace, make you a terrour to your enemies both at home and abroad, a refuge for the distressed, an immoveable pillar of safety for all Protestants, and a refreshing shadow for fainting Christendom.

“And with these wishes of all happiness and prosperity from the bottom of our hearts, we most humbly beseech you for your royal favour, that it may please your Majesty to take our Churches under the wings of your protection, (which were established in the reign of King Edward the 6th, and have ever since continued through the benevolence of your Majesty's royal predecessors). And we shall always persevere to demonstrate our most dutiful obedience to your Majesty on all occasions, as faithful subjects, and pray to the Almighty God to bless your sacred person, His Royal Highness the Prince, and all your Royal House, both temporally and eternally.”¹

The condition of the Dutch Church in the year 1720 was assured and prosperous, as shown by the following extract.²

“The present state of this Dutch Church in Augustin Friars, and the congregation of Strangers or the children of Strangers belonging to it, is thus.

“They have two ministers, Mr. Biscop was lately one, and another who is his assistant. They preach twice every Lord's-Day, and once in the week besides; and they administer the holy sacrament monthly, the last Sunday in the month, and lend their Church every first Sunday in the month to the Walloon congregation, for their reception of the sacrament; their own Church in Threadneedle Street being too strait for them. The ministers have allowed them a good yearly salary, and houses to dwell in, conveniently situate near the said Church: and competent subsistence allowed also to their widows. M. VANDER MERSON, a merchant and one of their Elders, at his own cost built a good house for one of their ministers, which cost £400, and after, finished it within at a considerable further expense; very much to his commendation, and the lasting memory of his charity and good will to this Church.

“They maintain their poor at their own charge, which stands them in near £1,200 per ann., part of which they collect every Sunday, and week day customarily whensoever there is a sermon, at the Church door, by Deacons of the Church, who stand there with basins to receive what the people are pleased to throw in. They have a fair Almshouse, built by themselves, standing in Moorfields, to contain 26 poor: together with a very handsome room for their Elders and Overseers to meet in, to consult together for the good estate and ordering of these poor, as occasion may require.”

Little of especial interest can be found concerning the foreign Churches in England after this period. The congregations gradually dwindled away, and one after another ceased to exist. The Walloons from Belgium merged with the French refugees, who came over in such great numbers. At the present day weekly service in the Dutch language is conducted only at Austin Friars; the records of the other Churches at Yarmouth, Colchester, Maidstone, Sandwich, Canvey Island, Dover,³ etc., having been lost, it is difficult to give particulars of the times when the services were discontinued. At Norwich alone is a small sum left, derived from the rents of small house property, which is distributed between a few poor descendants of the Dutch settlers. Once a year the minister of the Austin Friars Church goes there by appointment to hold a service and preach in the Dutch language. It is, however, with difficulty that these arrangements can be carried out, in consequence of the bad management and neglect in past years of the property belonging to that Church.

A report has not been found of the addresses made to the sovereigns succeeding George I, but the following answer given by Queen Victoria to the congratulations of the members of the Dutch Church, 31st July, 1837, on her accession, shows that the feeling expressed by Her Majesty is very gracious towards the Church founded by her predecessor, King Edward VI.

“I thank you for this loyal and dutiful address, for the sorrow which you express for the loss of His late Majesty, and for your congratulations on my accession. I look back with great satisfaction to the protection which you have found during so long a period in this country, and you may entirely rely upon the continuance of that protection under my reign.”

In 1862 a fire broke out on the night of the 21st November, entirely destroying the whole of the roof and interior fittings of the Church, which had just been thoroughly restored at a heavy cost. At first it was considered that the Church was not worth the cost of repairing, but much opposition was offered to the proposition of pulling down the walls which had been left standing. Mr. William Lightly and Mr. P'Anson, the architects consulted, advised a new building, which would save the heavier expense and greater trouble of the reconstruction of the old edifice. After considerable discussion it was thought advisable to repair the ruined Church; the total cost of doing so, including a new organ and the transfer of the library to Guildhall, being over £13,000, the fire insurance, etc. recovered being £12,000. The Church was reopened again for divine service on October 1st, 1865, when a sermon was preached by Dr. Gehle, the text being 2 Chronicles VII, 15-16.

In 1866 the London and North Western Railway Company obtained power by act of Parliament to take the land in Sun Street, on which the Almshouses of the Austin Friars Church were built. The compensation was settled at £7000.¹ On the 18th December, 1867, the sanction of the Court of Chancery was obtained to rebuild the almshouses at Old Charlton, Kent; the foundation stone being laid by the wife of Mr. J. van Emschot Hollertt, a deacon of the Church.² At this present time ten poor members live there, there being two married couples and six women. It is just now proposed to enlarge the number of these almshouses by building accommodation for eight more adults, and at the same time to be able to take in a certain number of convalescents and children, on the piece of ground purchased in 1867, which was left free for the purpose of building a residence for the minister; this arrangement, however, was not found convenient.

At the present time the number of the congregation varies from 50 to 80 persons, and double that number are present on festivals and the service on New Year's Eve, which was commenced by the present minister, the Rev. A. D. Adama van Scheltema. The annual amount of the Deacons' expenditure is about £800, £50 being distributed monthly to the poor of the Church, besides the cost of the almshouses. The Church and Deacon's funds are kept apart: these are derived to a great extent from the rent of the houses (used as offices) built on the land on the south side of the Church, bought from the Marquis of Winchester in 1611 for £600, which the members of the Church had contended was their own, under the original grant of the Church by King Edward VI, and concerning which Emanuel van Meteren made the affidavit which gave the new particulars concerning the Coverdale Bible. There are also some other properties near London.

Dit laat hy egter na, dit blyft van hem in't leeven,
